"FAITH, HOPE AND CHARITY—"

Faith and Hope may be exemplified at all times and Charity, in true manner should be likewise treated, but the latter has an especially good chance to be practiced by all people in Columbus this week.

On Wednesday morning the campaign to raise funds for the Community Chest started under the direction of Dr. William Oxley Thompson, president emeritus of Ohio State University. The goal this year has been set at $715,952 and will carry on the community social work during the year.

Fifty-three agencies will benefit this year. The increase of $49,820 over last year is due to the necessity of a shrinkage fund and also for emergency.

The campaign will continue through November 22. During this time it is needless to say that some of the efficient staff of workers will call upon the greater number of residents of the city.

It has been proven to be a worth-while thing and should be carried over the top this year as in previous times. It remains for the individual to GIVE to make it a success. "Charity," is the word of the day.

A LOOK AT THE STATE

Recent figures from the State Department of Agriculture show that there has been a steady decline recently in the crops and in land values in the state.

Figures disclose that the crop loss since 1917 is approximately $4,926,000 and land values have decreased more than 50 per cent. The loss in livestock is set at $1,694,000.

It appears that proper steps should be taken by the men who represent the state in Congress to make a better showing in the next few years. Ohio should continue to be one of the outstanding states of the union in every respect.

MORE PATRONS WANTED

Officials of the new Hilltop Branch Library announced last week that they wanted more adult patrons at the library.

Here is an opportunity for the citizens of the Hilltop to get behind a real institution of worth. At the same time it will prove beneficial to those who make use of the library.

Interest must be shown in the branch to assure that it will remain from year to year under the present plan of appropriation from city council.

Another Hilltopper of wide acquaintance has joined the up-to-date league and is making several improvements in his building. May we have more of them.

The pessimist is no longer the fellow who wears both suspenders and belt, but the one who wears the bright flashy suspenders that are appearing today surely must be an optomist to appear in them.

Modern planes can fly faster than bullets it is said but we do not yet care to travel astride a shell from any Big Bertha.

The Spectator

"Not Republican Strength but Democratic Weakness."

A week has passed since the election and individuals have had an opportunity to settle back to normalcy again and at the same time cast reflections as to the happenings of the recent campaign from beginning to end.

And this brings us to the point of first considering the cause of the overwhelming Republican victory.

I would not say the large majority of votes cast for Mr. Hoover was due to the strength of the Republican party and its candidate so much as I would that was due to the weakness of the Democratic candidate.

Undoubtedly the Democrats picked the weakest candidate in the field and in addition to minor weaknesses I feel that there were three outstanding things that were not thoroughly considered by the members who attended the national convention.

THREE LIVE ISSUES

With no prejudice whatever I say the three issues that were against Smith were his religion, his Tammany Hall connections and his stand on the wet and dry question.

Regardless of a man's politics, one of the above were sure to rub the wrong way on his knotty backbone. If he is a devout Protestant or connected with some fraternal organizations that are opposing the Catholics he would change his Smith vote. If he has known much of the workings of Tammany Hall in the past he would surely not consider giving it the upper hand of government again. If he is favoring prohibition he would cast his vote for the dry candidate.

OTHER POINTS

Other things to be considered in the reasons why Smith did not make a better showing I give herein. It has been a long standing maxim that he who knocks never gets anywhere. This was one of the outstanding faults I found with the Smith campaign. He did not center his speeches on the accomplishments or the good qualities of the Democratic party so much as he did continually lambast the Republican candidate and his associates.

Smith has a decided New York accent which played a great part in defeating him with those who were able to hear him either in person or over the radio. His faulty language and many cheap metaphores were detrimental.

A GOOD FEATURE

So much for the reasons for Democratic defeat with the exception that the country has shown itself to be generally conservative and satisfied with administrative affairs as they stand.

One of the most noticeable things of the election was the fact that the total popular vote was exceedingly heavier than in previous elections. Women were especially anxious to take advantage of their rights. Many have afterward remarked "The women did it." But even so it was their own right. More men should sit up and take notice.

THE SOUTH MELTED

This election was an exceedingly warm one because of the noticeable melting of the south. It is no longer a solid south. When Virginia, Florida and North Carolina can cast such a Republican vote it is a qualified fact that the barrier has been broken for Republicans and parties other than the Democratic in the south.

Originally the south came to be known as the solid south through the broken faith of the Civil War. The recent World War tended to establish old standards again and seal the bond of friendship. Time has worn down the barrier, too, but the political action taken in the election just past shows that straightforward and honest judgment will be used throughout the whole of the country even in politics.

CAMPAIGN FUNDS

Enormous amounts of money were spent in electing a president and people may be prone to think of it as foolish.

MORREY'S
A Study In Success
By Leonard N. Simons
A Renouned Visitor to Columbus

The Hilltop Record is proud to publish here impressions of an outsider. These impressions were written and given to the Hilltop Record by Mr. Leonard Simons, and are entirely unsolicited. It is merely an article of unstinted praise of the Morrey organization, written for no other purpose than that he wished to express his enthusiasm and give full share of credit to those whom he considered worthy.

A GOOD IDEA

Here is, to my mind, a GOOD IDEA! Having learned from Morrey the workings of his credit plan—hte advantages of buying on the plan—I was fully convinced that Morrey had conceived a TRULY GREAT IDEA. There is offered to every one America's finest jewelry at the lowest possible cash prices, and on the credit plan that removes every obstacle from the paths of those who wish to own what heretofore has been within the reach of only the most wealthy. Morrey has developed a patronage that is unique in its scope of classes which it serves. The plan has created an extra volume of business that logically allows Morrey to buy and sell for less.

The whole country—the whole world may learn a lesson from Morrey. I am making this statement from the point of view of an unbiased onlooker—one who perceives something good and appreciates its value. As I write, the thought occurs to me that even our President—Mr. Calvin Coolidge—is a staunch advocate of the principle of credit buying. The country's Chief Executive adheres to a principle that has been developed to its highest degree right in the city of Columbus by your own "Morrey."

GOOD IMPRESSION CONFIRMED

Upon my arrival in Columbus there came to me from time to time remarks about the Morrey Stores. My friends all advised me to see them before I left and, of course, I was greatly impressed by what every one was saying. My visit to each store more than confirmed my first impression.

Morrey Like Picture

Immediately I decided that I would make a thorough sight seeing trip through the store. Soon I had the pleasure of meeting Morrey. He is just as likeable as can be, and having seen his picture in the paper I felt as if I had known him for years. From then on I was personally conducted about the store by Morrey.

Courtesy and Money Back

I learned many things that made me "sit up and take notice." For instance: I learned of the liberal money back guarantee that goes with every sale, and I was positively delighted with the courtesy with which every one who entered the store was treated.

The Habit of Thrift

I am convinced that the credit plan devised by Morrey develops among its patrons, more than anything else, the habits of punctuality and thrift. The plan allows every one to buy on his own terms out of income rather than capital.

SALESPEOPLE ARE LOYAL

A fact of great significance to me was that the Morrey salespeople for years remain loyal. There are salesman at the store now who have served from its infancy. Every man, it is obvious, knows his business thoroughly.

Lots To Look At

The jewelry itself thrilled me and delighted me, but in all justice to the jewelry I will refrain from trying to describe with mere words the rare artistic masterpieces. I was amazed with the beauty of everything.

Meet Morrey Face to Face

There is no aloofness—no haughty air about the manner in which Morrey's business is conducted. Morrey is glad to meet each customer and every customer with a hearty handshake or a genial situation.

4 Years of Success

Really the twelve years of progress of the Morrey organization is a towering monument to all fine business ideals and ethics. Only recently the opening of his Linden Store Branch, and more recently, at the present time, the opening of his Hilltop Store Branch shows his progressiveness.

Opening of New Hilltop Store New Link
Reflects Progressiveness of Morrey's

It was with considerable satisfaction that Morrey told me of the opening of his new Branch Store—the Hilltop Store at 2369 W. Broad St. It is a beautiful new modern and up-to-date shop, and one in which Morrey feels he will be able to adequately and pleasantly serve his many friends and customers in the Hilltop section. The new store shows that the Morrey organization is a progressive one—ever alert to changing conditions in this city—and ever striving to be of utmost service to its many inhabitants.

Leonard Simons

NOTE:

There was no compensation—no ulterior reason that caused such an article to be written. It is an unsolicited story of a great success—Morrey's. I am proud to affix my name to this article of praise that I have given to you, and have no doubt but that all of you share in my enthusiasm.

which is partly true. On the other hand the campaign funds were contributed by those who are really able to do so and it is an admirable thing that a man can be classed as a donor and help defray some of the expense of the parties.

Parties are necessary things in the make- up of any government, it seems, and this being true we should be satisfied with the price paid for this election, considering that everything is proportionally higher than in previous years.

A PREDICTION

Not claiming to be an authority on politics I would at least make a prediction.

The past several campaigns have shown that the Democrats have not been at all successful and their weakness seems to be spreading. One reason for this is, as stated before, the changing vote of the strong solid south. Therefore I would say that one of two things will come to pass in the next two or three elections.

Either Franklin D. Roosevelt, governor-elect of New York, will gain strength in such proportions that he will be placed in the White House with the Roosevelt prestige behind him or the Democratic party will come to an end and a new party will be formed. Roosevelt has already commanded attention and I believe no other Democrat can hold the stage until election time four to eight years hence.

A SKIPPING GAME
Here is a good game for girls to play with a long skipping rope.
One girl takes half-a-dozen small stones and commences to skip in the rope whilst the rest cry:
"Here's a lassie with her treasure,
She has dropped one—come and see."
At the word "dropped" the girl stoops as she skips and places one stone upon the ground. Then she continues skipping whilst the rest sing
"Now that one she has recovered"
(Here she stoops and picks it up)
"She has given it to me."
At the word "given" the girl throws away the stone she picked up, and the girl who will take the next turn in the rope picks it up.
This is repeated until the girl in the rope has put down and picked up all the six stones, or until she has been caught by the rope. If she has been caught by the rope her score is only the number of stones she has picked up again. If she has put down one and not picked it up, then that scores merely as half a point.

The Hilltop Record

THE Hilltop is one of the wettest places in the city when it rains and the dryest when it is hot weather. Let's have water tanks and sewers.

Of Interest to the People of the Hilltop and Vicinity

Vol. XII. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, Thursday, November 22, 1928. No. 30

GIANT WATER TANK MAY BE ERECTED HERE

Would Relieve Low Pressure on Hilltop Is Keynote of Recommendation.

First steps toward relief in the water supply on the Hilltop were taken Tuesday when Waterworks superintendant Hoover submitted recommendations to Safety Director Duffy stating the need of two giant water storage tanks, one of which will probably be built on the Hilltop.

The recommendations will be turned over to Council at once and some definite action may be taken on Monday night.

The tank that is to be built on the West Side, according to the recommendation, will probably be near Hague avenue and Broad street. It will have a capacity of 500,000 gallons.

The tanks will be used to bolster up the pumping and distribution system and to increase the pressure in the sections where it is weak at present.

Estimates of the costs have not been submitted as yet. They will be about 100 feet high and 60 feet in diameter.

Investigation of the water supply on the Hilltop shows that the pressure falls 41 pounds when the load is at its peak. The installation of the tanks would restore pressure here.

It is thought the pressure lagging in this section is due to encrusted pipes which have lost a great part of their inside area.

The other section of the city to be affected by the proposal is the North Side.

Highland Downed By Barrett Five

Will Tangle With Champion at Glenwood Shelter House on Friday.

Highland lost their second basket ball game last week to Barrett when 16 points were piled up against them during the first half while the Hilltoppers gathered but two.

The second half of the game was a different story, but the lead was too much to overcome and the final score was 18 to 10 in favor of the Southenders.

Highland players allowed their opponents too many free shots during the first half, and when they secured the ball failed to work it down the floor. The denfense functioned much better during the second half, holding Barrett to two fouls.

The Highland boys have been working hard this week and expect to take Champion into camp for their first win on Friday. It will be the first appearance of the Champion team on the Glenwood Shelter House floor.

Highland will meet McKinley on the floor of the Linden school next Wednesday.

Announcement was made Monday of the purchase of the Reese Restaurant, 2326 W. Broad St., by H. P. Felger of Pomeroy, Ohio, who announces that he will conduct the business along the same lines as his predecessors.

HILLTOP MEN LEARN WELDING AT Y.M.C.A.

Three Are Enrolled in Evening Auto Mechanics Classes.

Among classes in which Hilltop men and women are enrolled at the Columbus YMCA Schools, particular interest is centering just now on work in auto mechanics and welding. The development of a major airport on Hilltop in addition to the passing of the bond issue of the municipal airport and the establishment of aircraft manufacturing plants here are creating a specific demand for men trained in trades utilized in this industry.

This has meant demand for mechanics and particularly good welders.

Eldon Bower, 2301 Apple St.; Faye Poole, 2853 Sullivant Ave., and E. W Rhoades, 2925 Olive St., are included in men who are now completing work in welding at the "Y" where both acetylene and electric welding are included in the course offered.

Wedding Anniversary Flowers Are Used Later For Funeral

Probably one of the most unusual things to happen to a man is to see the flowers that are to cover his own casket. Such a thing happened on the Hilltop last week.

On Sunday, Nov. 11, Mr. and Mrs. George B. Geyer, residing with their daughter, Mrs. Forest Wilson, 38 S. Wheatland Ave., celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of their wedding. A large celebration was planned for the day and the ten children, 22 grandchildren and three great grandchildren were present with many other guests.

One of the features of the day, in addition to the big family dinner, was the presentation of 60 giant chrysanthemums to the couple by their children. These, with many other flowers, gave the home a rare atmosphere and the large "Mums" were the center of much comment.

Many beautiful gifts were given the couple and midst many thanks everyone was in good spirits.

Then on Sunday evening Mr. Geyer was found by his daughter in his room. He stated that he felt ill and went to bed. Later in the evening he was taken to Mt. Carmel hospital and was operated on soon after.

He died Tuesday morning and the funeral was held on Thursday. The 60 "mums" which were given by his children were made into a large blanket and covered his casket before the funeral. These same flowers had given a delightful atmosphere at the wedding anniversary celebration.

Mr. Geyer was 83 years old and had lived south of Stone for 62 years. He had lived in Columbus for the past 75 years and was a retired farmer.

"Every Thursday morning he was the first one to read the Record and waited at the door for the boy to bring it to him," said his daughter.

AGED RESIDENT TAKEN BY DEATH

HILLTOP TEAM UP TO PAR IN FUND DRIVE

M. W. Seiller, Captain, Reports That Donations Will Equal Those of Last Year.

As the Community Drive ends today the Hilltop team under the head of M. W. Seiller, will make special efforts to increase their amount pledged to the cause.

Seiller reports that the Hilltop contributions will be equal to that of previous years. Donations to date have been received from the greater number of business men on the Hilltop.

Other members of the Hilltop team are: Wyatt L. Millikin, R. O. Harrison, Fred Raether, C. Carlton Hartley, C. J. Kohn, H. G. Deems, R. C. Lane, E. F. Shank and M. S. Acree.

Harrison reports a 10 per cent increase in the amount pledged over that of last year.

Seiller has been captain of the Hilltop and West Side teams since the organization of the project several years ago. This year the downtown West Side is in charge of a business man in that section.

"It is better to be a contributor to the fund at the present than to be giving here and there during the whole year," says Mr. Seiller. "I am thoroughly convinced that it is a good thing and I am willing to give time and money to its furtherance."

Anyone having a contribution may give it today at Seiller's store on West Broad street, or any other member of the team in charge of the Hilltop.

Thinkers Needed Says Chauncy

Must Keep Our Money and Our Sanity Says Speaker at P.-T. A. Meeting.

"There are two main reasons for thinking," stated Dr. E. F. Chauncey, pastor of the Trinity Episcopal church when he spoke before the father and son meeting of the West Broad School Parent-Teacher Association Friday evening at the school.

"First, we need to think to keep our money, and second, we must think to keep our sanity," he continued. He also pointed out that two great movements of the present day have been brought about by thinkers, one here at home in the Community Drive and the other, the World Peace Movement.

Ray G. Haunts, in introducing the speaker, expressed his desire to see the membership drive of the association become successful.

Music was furnished by Henry Schultz, Tom Taylor and the Boys Glee Club.

A new study circle is to be formed today at 2 p. m. at the home of Mr. T. P. Brown, 64 N. Powell Ave. All mothers having children attending West Broad school are invited to attend the meeting.

Spirit of Indian Summer

BARBARA GERTRUDE LITTMAN

Again she comes with her dark Indian eyes,
Haunting the woodlands with her straying feet,
Wistfully looking to the autumn skies,
Marking the tryst where she was wont to meet.

Trailing her gowns about with faint surmise,
She hears her phantom lover's Indian drum.
There lives a poignant sadness in her eyes
As she waits for him that does not come.

Kissing the throats of birds already on the wing,
Dancing gaily among the falling leaves,
She lifts her voice, trying to sing,
Then falls, a dying wraith, beneath the trees.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"OH WHERE ARE KINGS AND EMPIRES NOW?"

This familiar hymn which always makes one feel keenly how transitory may be wealth and power and how uncertain a thing is earthly glory, owes its origin to circumstances which brought home that realization to its author, Bishop Coxe.

Written in 1830, the composition of the hymn followed an extended tour which the bishop had made through the Orient. There, at the seat of ancient power, where he saw the relics of once omnipotent empires long crumbled into dust, the truth was borne in upon him of the transitoriness of mundane powers and the futility of earthly vanities.

And in that realization he found the inspiration for the hymn that has stood the test of time, the passing of the years only adding to its prestige and establishing it more firmly among the classics that will be heard as long as hymns are sung. There is something powerfully arresting in the words:

Oh where are kings and empires now
Of old that went and came?
But Lord, Thy church is praying yet
A thousand years the same.

Speaking of chop suey, it little matters where the stuff originated so long as it doesn't become the national dish of our free country.

FOOT-PRINTS

This is an imprint of a normal foot, and most normal feet tread straight ahead. This straight tread puts the body weight where it should be, and there is "spring" in the step.

This is a weak or "flat" foot. The arch is broken down, bones displaced, muscles strained and weakened. Feet are turned outward in walking. No spring in step. Feet and legs tired and troublesome. This condition can be relieved, but very difficult to cure.

THE DOCTOR SHOE

is built on the proven principle of correct "balance" and proper distribution of weight. This shoe is not a cure-all. But if you will let us fit you with The Doctor Shoe and you do not get more real shoe satisfaction than you ever had before, we will gladly make refund of full purchase price or such adjustment as you may desire.

We wish you would give this shoe a chance to see what it can do for you.

SHEEP HERDING DOG TO BE SHOW FEATURE

Fourth Livestock Show to Be Held at Cleveland Thanksgiving Week.

A sheep herding dog, a "high school horse," and a stallion that jumps over automobiles, will divide the last three nights of the Fourth Annual Cleveland Livestock Show with the Cleveland Amateur Horse Show to be held at Public Hall during Thanksgiving week.

Forty entries for this first predominantly amateur horse show have already been received.

Twenty-five horse classes have been arranged, mostly for riding and light harness horses.

Eight classes will be run off on each of the last three nights of the show, Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Pony classes will be shown in the afternoon. Tuesday and Wednesday nights of the show will be given over to the judging and the auction of nearly 200 baby beef steers. A feature of the auction will be the sale of the Grand Champion of the show. The average sale price for the last three shows has been $3,410.00.

A revival of interest in riding and driving horses in Northeastern Ohio is seen in the interest shown in this show.

The official definition of an amateur rider is as follows:

"An amateur is one who rides for the love of the sport, not as a profession or for a livlihood, and who shall not have received any monetary consideration for his or her services, and shall not be professionally interested in the purchase, sale or trading of horses." The rules further state that the status of an amateur shall be decided by the show committee.

The intelligence of the "sheep herding dog" that can scatter, assemble, divide and drive sheep on his master's instruction and the "high school horse" that steps as clever paces as the dog are rare specimens of animal intelligence.

You'll do better at Seiller's after all.

Don't bully waiters. But don't let them slip nothin' over on you. Don't be a doormat, but don't be a matador, neither.

"GET SET" FOR WINTER WITH A NEW PONTIAC SIX

TO GET yourself "set" for winter—to make sure that your car will be free from the common, but annoying cold weather ailments . . . buy today's Pontiac Six. For with its advanced design, its rugged construction and its thermostatically-controlled cross-flow radiator, today's Pontiac Six provides freedom from winter driving cares offered by no other car in its field . . . The cross-flow radiator minimizes losses of alcohol and water through boiling. The thermostat retards water flow until the engine becomes warm. Hence, less choking is required and less oil dilution occurs . . . Besides these advantages, Pontiac offers all the stamina and dependability for which it is justly famed. When you drive this great General Motors Six, the approach of cold weather brings no anxiety concerning the performance of your car.

2-Door Sedan, $745; Coupe, $745; Sport Roadster, $745; Phaeton, $775; Cabriolet, $795; 4-Door Sedan, $825; Sport Landau Sedan, $875. All prices at factory. Check Oakland-Pontiac delivered prices—they include lowest handling charges. General Motors Time Payment Plan available at minimum rate.

Vol. XII. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, Wednesday, November 28, 1928 No. 31

Merchants to Give Car To Someone on Hilltop

Tickets to Be Given With Purchases Until Feb. 1; Have Public Drawing.

A new automobile is to be given to someone on the Hilltop by the Hilltop Business Men's association, February 1.

Plans for the above were approved by members of the association at their meeting at the Matsonia Monday evening.

All those who do their Christmas shopping on the Hilltop with merchants belonging to the business men's association will have chances to win the car.

TICKETS WITH PURCHASES

Tickets will be given with every purchase of 50 cents or every 50 cents received on account between now and February 1. Stubs of the tickets will be placed in several centrally located boxes and a public drawing will be held about February 1. Tickets will probably be ready to issue Monday or Tuesday.

The kind of car to be given away will be announced next week with further details of the contest.

Details of the drawing will be given later, however it will be by uninterested persons and will be held publicly.

A car was given away by the merchants two years ago and $400 in cash was given by the same method at the Hilltop Picnic last August.

Acting Postmaster Geren was endorsed by the association for the position to be filled by appointment soon. The action was stated as being "purely non political and from the standpoint of merit."

Men's Club Honors Church Founder

Presbyterian Men's Organization Name Club After Early Pastor.

Honoring the memory of Dr. James Hoge, founder of Presbyterianism in Central Ohio, who came to Columbus in 1806, members of the men's club of Hoge Memorial church voted unanimously to name their organization Hoge Memorial Men's Club, at the opening meeting of the season at the church Thursday evening.

Dr. Hoge had the longest Presbyterian pastorate in Columbus. He was pastor of the First church for 51 years. He was sent into this territory on a salary of $300, from Philadelphia headquarters, to cover Ohio, Kentucky and adjacent territory.

Hoge Memorial church was named after him at the celebration of his hundredth anniversary in 1906.

The following officers of the men's club were installed: George Matson, president; Christie Michel, vice president; Jack Merriman, secretary; Don Lear, treasurer; Sam Roberts, J. H. Bigony and C. B. Sherburn, directors.

"Rudy" Wittenmeier, local humorist of radio fame, addressed the group following a dinner cooked and served by the men. Another meeting will be held next month.

Church Congregation to Receive Picture

A picture of Dr. James Hoge, founder of Presbyterianism in Columbus, will be presented to the congregation of Hoge Memorial church Sunday morning by a friend.

Foster Copeland will deliver a short address. Special music will be furnished by the choir.

Several repairs have been made during the past week in the Sunday school rooms. Rededication services will be held at 9:15 in the beginners and primary room.

Sunday marks the beginning of the third year of the pastorate of Rev. H. G. Hutchison. During this time 175 members have been added to the church.

Thanksgiving Services

Thanksgiving day services will be held at St. John's Evangelical Lutheran church Thursday at 9 a. m.. Rev. H. B. Koch will deliver the address, "A Nation Acknowledges God's Providence."

West Students Give

Seven baskets were filled and distributed among the poor this evening by members of the Hi-Y and Girl Reserves clubs of West High school. The two clubs co-operated in raising the money.

Grudge Against Oil Company Nets $20

A new attitude toward big business was registered here Saturday night when three young men "took their grudge out" on the Standard Oil Co.

They entered a filling station just west of the Big Four crossing and after tying up Glen Martin, 143 Wheatland Ave., attendant, took $20 from the cash register. They wore masks.

They did attempt to rob Martin of his own cash, but stated they had a personal grudge against the Standard Oil Co.

J. Craig of Galloway approached the station and the waiting member of the "grudge" crew shot at him. Craig later returned and freed Martin.

Church to Give Christmas Play

Motorists should not start an automobile engine in a closed garage during cold weather, and the engine should not be warmed by "idling" in a closed garage. Flueless gas stoves should be guarded against too, he says.

Turkey Day Heralds Approach of St. Nick

It's here again, Thanksgiving. And it heralds the approach of Christmas.

As early as last Thursday turkeys and geese in many Hilltop back yards began their merry gobbling and squawking, not knowing that they were soon to be served on the Thanksgiving table and several days after in hash. But then all indications are that they were a happy lot, showing further that what one doesn't know doesn't hurt.

But speaking of turkey, the national symbol of Thanksgiving, the present day provider doesn't have it so easy in securing the fowl for the feast as did his Puritan ancestors back in old New England. Where they once stepped onto the back porch and shot their turkey, the man of today has to go through a long coaxing period with his shining dimes and dollars to get the turkey to come his way.

Although turkey is the Thanksgiving meat of many families it is also a favorite at Christmas time and local grocers say the demand at the latter holiday is equal to that they will experience today. One reason for this may be that the buyers feel that prices will fall later in the season. This seldom happens however.

Hilltop people have many things to be thankful for and probably one of the first to come to mind, is that they are living on the Hilltop.

Little brother is thankful that Christmas is just around the corner and that he can count the number of days until old Saint Nick will arrive again. He is also very careful to watch his manners and actions during these last few days.

School children in general are thankful for the two extra week-end holidays.

Father is thankful that he must buy but one each turkey each year but has no hard feelings because of the expenditure.

And mother is thankful that all have good health and are able to enjoy the dinner set before them.

Cowboys to Meet Irish Tomorrow

Last Game of Season Will Be Held on Central Lot at 10 a. m.

West High Cowboys will complete their season on the football field tomorrow when they meet Aquinas in a Turkey Day tilt at Central Field at 10 o'clock.

While West stands in the totally defeated class for the season Aquinas has a record little better, having won their only game from South.

East will play North in the afternoon to decide the city championship. East will be tied for first honors if they defeat North and should take West into camp in a post season game.

The East-West tilt that was scheduled for last week but was postponed on account of not having a suitable field for the game. The game may be played off after the season is ended tomorrow but it will have no official bearing unless East defeats North.

West officials are contemplating the development of a freshman squad for next season to furnish more material.

License on Sale

Automobile tags for 1929 will go on sale Saturday, county auditor, A. J. Thatcher announces. He warns drivers to get their licenses early.

Branch Library Appropriation Cut Displeases

Hilltop Business Men Voice Objections to Proposed Cut In Mayor's Budget.

When the public hearing on the mayor's budget for next year is held Monday civic associations from over the city will present their objections to the proposed cut in the appropriation for the four newly formed branch libraries.

Members of the Hilltop Business Men's association voted Monday night to co-operate with other associations in this respect and cited the need of at least the present amount in operating the branches.

The original amount to be used in the four branches was set at $40,000 but only $30,000 was available during the past year. At present the branches are operating in the best way they can with that amount of money, John Pugh, city librarian stated Tuesday. He points out that the cut would mean that the branches would have to operate on half their present efficiency.

HILLTOP LEADS

"The Hilltop has established the biggest record in the city," Pugh says. "During the seven weeks that the branch has been open there have been 1155 registrations received. The total for the four branches is 3666, of which about three-fourths are children who could not get downtown to use the library on account of the traffic hazards."

The total circulation at the Hilltop branch for November, to Monday, was 5222 as compared with 4809 for October. There were 1047 magazines used during October and 984 during November. During November there have been 809 reference books used at the local branch.

Harry A. Brady and Carl E. Staley Head Westgate Groups.

Dr. Turner was first master of the lodge.

Carl E. Staley, 2783 Vida Pl., was recently elected high priest of the Westgate Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, meeting in Westgate Temple.

Rings, trustee.

Has Solution to Child Problems

A new approach to the solution of children's problems is to be started by H. P. Rauch, who for several years has been affiliated with the State Bureau of Juvenile Research. The plan, says Mr. Rauch, is very simple in its function. It is simply a study of the child in its home or the school, depending on where its mal-adjustment occurs.

Under the P-C-H counsel service the child will be examined and observed in his home environment and adjustments worked out in relationship to these factors.

Another feature of this work is the plan of continuing the study and observations over monthly periods rather than in single session examinations and conferences. Some cases will adjust themselves in a short time, while others, he says, will require longer periods.

Rauch says this plan is the outgrowth of his years of experience and his contact with the thousands of cases of delinquent and behavior cases which he has observed at the Bureau and in the public schools.

Rauch lives at 208 N. Ogden Ave. He is a graduate of Miami and Ohio State universities. He holds a state life certificate as a teacher and has spent seven years as a teacher and school administrator.

This plan will be started December 1.

Local Flyers Risk Lives to Find Pilot

Planes from Columbus Airport on Sullivant avenue, Norton field and other nearby airports went out into the stormy weather Sunday in an attempt to find a fellow flyer who had been lost in the storm.

Their did was futile, however, and no longer will the residents of the Hilltop hear the roar of air mail plane piloted by Tilden "Pete" Johnson making his regular 4:30 a. m. landing at the local field.

For "Pete" was found in the wreckage of his plane near West Lebanon, Sunday after an all day search. His failure to arrive at the Columbus Airport at his regular time caused searching planes to take to the air.

Highland to Have Art Exhibition

Parents and Friends Invited to See Work at School on December 4, 5, 6.

The Art Department of Highland Junior High school, under the direction of Mr. T. W. Birmingham, will hold an exhibition, December 4, 5, 6, at the school in Room 1.

The 7B's will exhibit in color design, the 7A's design work applied to lamp shades and draperies, the 8A's advanced work in applied color design to artcraft objects for the home.

Tuesday at 1 p. m. a class of 7B pupils will give a demonstration in block printing.

Wednesday at the same hour the 9B's and 9A's will demonstrate the making of effective designs in tie dyeing. On Thursday the last day of the exhibit the classes will do general art work.

All parents and those interested in seeing the actual making of many of the Artcraft projects which now decorate Hilltop homes are invited.

Over 200 separate entries have been judged artistic enough to be placed in the exhibition, all the work of Highland pupils this year. These include designs, both single and patterned, example of tie dyeing, block printing, lamp shades, handkerchiefs and several exhibits of batik work on silk and velvet by Mr. Birmingham. The P.-T. A. is especially invited to attend Tuesday.

P.-T. A. Wants Men

An attempt is being made by the various Parent-Teacher Associations over the city to increase their membership with men as well as ladies in their membership drive.

A prize will be awarded the association obtaining the largest percentage of men members.

Woman Injured

Mrs. Bertha Carter, 28, of 374 S. Harris Ave., received cuts and bruises about the head, and her four-year-old son, C. V. Carter, jr., suffered cuts about the face Saturday night when they were struck by a taxicab at Gay and High streets.

Green Honored

Floyd F. Green, 3040 Crescent Dr., city councilman, was elected president of the Fall Reunion Class of Scioto Consistory Scottish Rite last Wednesday. There are 120 in the class.

Garages Organize

Garage owners of Franklin County organized last week for the purpose of exchanging ideas, aiding credit and bringing about co-operation in their field. The body is known as the Franklin County Automotive Association.

To Hold Hearing On Ice Mfg. Plant

Business Men's Association Hires Attorney to Present Objections.

Objections cited by the Hilltop Business Men's association to the establishment of an ice manufacturing plant at Hague avenue and Broad street by the City Ice and Fuel Co., are being considered by the city planning commission and will come before the city council for a public hearing later.

The business men's association has employed C. J. Randall as attorney to present their objections at the meeting. The hearing may be held Monday night.

Permission was granted by council to the ice company to build the plant but City Attorney Charles A. Leach has cited that the building would be illegal as the zoning ordinances now stands.

The plant can not be operated until the zoning ordinance is amended to make that section for first industrial instead of for business.

A change of the zoning ordinance would be an encroachment on the retail district as it is at present.

Several business men have indicated that they will be present at the public hearing to voice their objections to the change.

Nazarenes to Hold Mission Convention

A district missionary convention of the Church of the Nazarene will be held at the Warren Avenue Church of the Nazarene beginning Sunday and continuing through December 2.

Dr. J. G. Johnson of Kansas City, general missionary secretary of the Nazarene church will address the meetings. Rev. Mrs. S. N. Fitkin of New York, president of the W. F. M. S. and Rev. Arthur Anderson and Miss Eva Carpenter, returned missionaries from India will also be present.

Ankle Hurt

Deputy Sheriff William Everett, 492 Helen St., suffered a fractured ankle Monday, when he fell from his motorcycle at Mound and High streets. He was treated at St. Carmel hospital.

Hilltop in Council

The following matters pertaining to the Hilltop were discussed at city council Monday night:

Granted special permit to James Worrel to erect ice station and confectionery at rear of 1906 Floral Ave.

Referred to service committee recommendations for a larger feeder main survey, calling for installation of a 300,000-gallon tank on the West Side.

School Chileren Aid Needy

Children attending the elementary schools of the Hilltop are showing a real spirit of Thanksgiving this year as is witnessed by their gifts of food, clothing and money for those who are not able to provide a Thanksgiving dinner equal to their own.

Donations were received at John Burroughs school Tuesday and were being received today at West Broad.

Potatoes, cabbage, canned goods and groceries of all descriptions were in the gifts of those at John Burroughs. Streets were lined Tuesday with children bringing a head of cabbage, a small bag of potatoes or a can of fruit.

"These children are so liberal that we had to tell them not to bring any more," said Miss Daisy Charters, principal.

At West Broad the same scene appeared as students went to their morning classes. In addition to the vegetables and canned goods, they brought clothing and money for the shoe fund. Last year $80 was raised in this manner and it was thought the amount would exceed that this year due to the enlarged school.

A Thanksgiving program was to be presented this morning by the students, featuring a playlet, "The First Thanksgiving" by the Third grade.

After all the children have something to be especially thankful for, because there will be no school until Monday.

Violin on Display

An exact copy of the famous Stradivarius violin has just recently been completed by D. W. Emery, well known Columbus violin tacher, whose studio is located at 2383½ W. Broad St.

It is entirely hand made and Mr. Emery was a year in making the instrument. It has been pronounced by a collector of fine violins to be a fine instrument in both tone and workmanship.

The violin is on display at Cooper's music store.

Boy Hunting Victim Didn't Have Own Gun

When Leo James Kelley, 17 of 61 N. Oakley Ave., was killed while on a hunting trip November 17, he did not have a gun of his own according to relatives. This was erroneously stated by downtown papers.

The boy was attempting to pull the gun belonging to D. T. Wilkins, 69 N. Sandusky St., through a wire fence when the trigger caught on the wire.

WE PITY THE ENGLISH MERCHANT

American business men may have trouble in collecting their accounts when due but the following examples of methods followed in England might give them something else to think about.

"This may interest you," writes an American abroad. "I ordered a motor racing helmet about a year ago and for some reason the account was sent to a Club which I rarely visit. I received the second notice yesterday, the account being over a year past due."

This printed notice was attached to the statement:

"A. J. White (Hatters) Ltd., Hat and Cap Makers, have the honour to enclose their account herewith. They beg most respectfully to thank you for the favour of your patronage, and solicit your kind recommendation."

Mr. Pemberton says he sent his check by return mail.

So-called English gentlemen who patronize the West End tailors of London are notoriously slow pay. For this reason the tailors allow a 10½ discount for cash.

One day a man order several suits, and when the tailor asked him if he wished to pay cash and earn the discount, he exclaimed, quite angrily, that he always paid cash.

"I pay cash on December 31st for all goods purchased during the year," he sincerely explained.

UNION CHURCH SERVICES

Thanksgiving, a day of thanks for all the comforts and happiness of the past and those that are to be in the future. Today it is only fitting that the community should join in such services.

Hilltop churches have followed the custom of holding union services of several denominations to be attended by the congregations of all the churches. This year the same plan will be followed but instead of holding the services on Thanksgiving morning they will be held Thanksgiving eve, Wednesday before at 7:30 at the Burgess Avenue U. B. church.

Dear Sir: I am sure every person on the Hilltop will agree that we have an excellent library in our new Hilltop Branch Library, but at the same time I do not feel that it is being conducted in a way to serve the greatest number of Hilltop residents.

The staff is very efficient and pleasant but I feel that the hours during which time the library is open to the public are not satisfactory.

For the school children the afternoon hours are satisfactory but for those who are employed during the afternoons it is impossible to get to the library in time to secure books.

I would like very much to have a change in the hours and feel that the library should be open at least two evenings each week.

A Book Lover.

Editor Hilltop Record:

While the Prohibition Party vote in Franklin County and the state is small some of your readers will be interested to know what it is, so we wish to give that vote as we have it. Some complaints have been made by voters of this ticket that their votes were not recorded and we feel that the minor parties suffer a good deal in this way.

The Prohibition Party nominee for Supreme Judge, Albert L. Tolcott of Cleveland made a record vote of 104,190.

William F. Varney, candidate for President received 3,556 votes in Ohio. The complete vote for Governor is not available yet but it runs considerably less than Mr. Varney's vote.

The vote for the candidates in Franklin County is as follows:

Representatives to the General Assembly, Alvah Beach, 231 votes; Rev. Anna L. Burgett, 352 votes; Prescott Gilliian, 263 votes; Rev. W. E. Jones 273 votes; Richard H. Outcalt, 239 votes.

For Sheriff, Ervil E. Benedict, 250 votes.

For Clerk of Courts, Thomas E. Pool, 232 votes.

For Commissioners, D. Murray Graham, 230 votes; O. M. Swickard, 179 votes.

For County Treasurer, John W. Wagner, 280 votes.

"Buckeye Plea" Is New Grid Song

"The Buckeye Plea," is the name of the new football song of Ohio State university and was sung in the stadium on November 3 at the Princeton-Ohio State game.

It is set to the tune of "The Vagabond King."

Following are the first two verses:

Famed and stalwart Buckeyes,
Do you hear our war cry,
Fight, fight, on for O-H-I-O,
Crush the invading linemen,
Smear the backs behind them,
VIC-TOR-Y for O-H-I-O,
Charge that line, make every runner fall,
Never let the fortune hunt that ball,
Smash each strong onlaught,
Men, It's now or never,
Victory for O-H-I-O.

Some both bruised and bleeding,
Will you heed our pleading,
Fight, fight, on for O-H-I-O,
Fight, as now we cheer you,
Make our foemen fear you,
For the love of O-H-I-O,
Onward, onward, 'gainst the common foe,
Forward, forward, on to victory go;
Fight for alma mater,
Cheer each son and daughter,
Hear ye sons of O-H-I-O.

The words were written by Walter Malloy, a graduate of Ohio State, now with the Ohio Bell Telephone Co.

New College Yell Is "Whoopee"

Dear Folks:

Here we are again after having a week's vacation in swinging the pen but the hand hasn't been just exactly easy because we have experienced an avalanche of mid-terms just before the homecoming.

If you don't believe the old grads have an interest in their alma mater just come around and see them when they come back for their homecoming. They are students again and join in on the joyful "whoopee" that is becoming the national college yell.

The fraternity initiations took up the whole of last week and we finished up with the boys at 2:30 Saturday morning after giving them a good dose of raw liver and castor oil and breaking the remaining few paddles.

Then in addition to the football game on Saturday we had several big dinners and entertainments for the sake of the wise saps who have passed beyond the portals of the same campus. Regardless of all weather reports it was a wet day.

Another of those famous scandal sheets made its appearance the last of the week. And since a real human girl was elected to be homecoming queen instead of some cow of Maudine Ormsby fame, the whole thing was full of so-called scandal of the queen and other collegiates of both sexes, especially those popular in fraternity and sorority circles.

Must give you all the signing off mark and call it a day.

Joe College.

The Spectator

"Collegiatology—we might term this slang."

THROWING THE COLLEGIATE SLANG

The "hot lines" that are being thrown about on the campuses of the country are a source of much interest and with this topic in mind I interviewed Jack Wordley, the college student of the Club and he has provided the following examples of the way the college student "slings" his language to make up what might be known as Collegiatology.

AND HOW WE ABBREVIATE

"If you don't think we abbreviate," says Jack, "just listen to some of our popular phrases.

"Just after attending the 'army,' in truth the R. O. T. C., the rookie trots across the oval to 'the fire trap' (University Hall) where he is greeted by his 'prof' in 'Poly Sci' class (Political Science).

"The boys have their 'dates' with their 'sweet bebs' and if one isn't exactly satisfactory she is 'shelved' and he calls her a 'sap' while he in return is a 'pill.'

"Speaking of pills, the football is commonly heard of in some such phrase as 'boot that pill' and mid thousands the irregular yells of 'whoopee' fill the air. If the game is a good one it is a 'ripper,' a 'doll,' a 'pip' or a 'snort.' These same terms might just well be used to describe some 'hot flame.'

"Around the fraternity it is 'hash,' 'play for me,' 'on probe,' 'can't get the swing,' 'assume the angle,' 'flutter upstairs' and 'warble some French.'

So goes the language of the campus but it has many advantages one of which is that we may say a thing most any way and yet know it will be understood if it sounds collegiate."

TELLING THE WORLD

The world just must know what is going on and the news gathering means today are sure that nothing will be left undone. And another feature is that the world must know a thing almost as soon as it happens.

Which brings us to the point that there was an election recently and within a very short time the approximate results were flashed to every corner of the globe and we at home were even able to get the reports of precincts as they were tabulated.

And almost as recent was the football game on Nov. 3 between Princeton and Ohio State in which five radio stations, four news cameras, a score of news photographers and 16 special news gathering services were on hand to tell the world.

If you would really understand the romance of this giant arrangement for gathering and writing the news and displaying it in pictures before the eyes of the world, you have a large task before you but one that above all others would be interesting.

THE LITTLE FROG

A friend states that he would rather be a little frog in a large puddle than a large frog in a small puddle.

In this same comparison we look upon the business man who is content to live in his way in his small town or community while his more ambitious brother expands his business and grows with the city. I believe the latter is preferable regardless of whether we be frogs or humans.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT
By F. A. WALKER

YOU; YOUR NEIGHBOR

The most distressing hurts are given in silence.

Hearts have ached, eyes have wept and souls have despaired under the cruel lash of hushed coldness, which strikes and cuts without making the slightest sound.

Upon sensitive men and women the curl of scornful lips, a disdainful glance or the tilt of a haughty head, frequently inflict wounds which time can never heal.

Loves have perished, hopes have died and lives had gone wrong because prides, spite or malevolence at a critical moment has reproached them, though not a word has been spoken.

Women have ill names, men have bad reputations, for the reason that friends who ought to speak up for them remain silent when mischievious tongues are noisy with defamatory clatter.

How many betrayals are made by hanging heads and sealed lips?

Their number is legion, countless as the leaves of the forest.

And all these terrible vituperations come from some wretched individual who is inconsiderate of his or her neighbor.

This neighbor may sit at your elbow day by day, or live next door, struggling as you are struggling to rise in the world, beset by harrowing misgivings, and bearing burdens which in every particular are as heavy as yours.

And the feeling you exhibit in silence toward him or her, because of some fancied dislike, or some phase of character which you fail to understand, is everything but charitable.

In fact, it often happens to be the foriest calumny, shriveling your soul and robbing you of God's love and blessing, intended by Him to make mankind neighborly and kindly disposed toward one another.

It takes two to make happiness, one to give and another to receive. By all means, be one or the other, which can best be done by "loving your neighbor as yourself."

Plant today in the sod of good-will a grain of happiness and see how quickly it will sprout and grow.

In an incredibly short time it will enrich your whole being and yield to you a bountiful harvest which you and your neighbor may garner with joyful hands, and then go singing together down life's rough road till the end of your days.

Honor Memory Of Schubert

Famous Composer Was Born In Suburb of Vienna, 1797.

On Nov. 19, 1828, there passed on another genius whose products were so insignificant to publishers and producers of the generation that his work was greatly retarded by lack of means; while the years of life were greatly shortened by the conservativeness of printers in grasping the new type of music and by refusing to pay him a righteous price.

It is often said that genius seldom flowers in high places, so we are not surprised to find born into a schoolmaster's family on Jan. 31, 1797, Franz Schubert. His father was then teaching in Lichtenthal, a suburb of Vienna. We might state that he was a boy prodigy for he quickly outclassed his teachers. Holzer says "I cannot claim to have given him any lessons, I simply talked with him and looked at him in silent amazement."

Schubert gathered his knowledge from various places beside his father's study and Holzer, the parish choirmaster. We hear of him in the Imperial Chapel choir school under the master Von Spaun. Many concerts at the Chapel consisted wholly of Franz's compositions.

As it often happens good things will come to the top, and we find that by public subscription for 100 copies the "Erl King" was given its first hearing in 1819. The result was the sale of 800 copies and the entrance of Franz Schubert into the publics' favor.

Financial affairs were not being bettered so in 1818 he accepted the offer of Count Esterhazy to be house music-master. It was here that we find the only romance of Franz Schubert, this toward the younger Countess Caroline, who by custom could not marry a poor musician.

Time passed along with Schubert still composing faster than he could put it on paper, and the publishers became more friendly, better paying and more encouraging toward his lighter numbers, venturing nothing on his symphonies, operas or cantatas.

At this same time another great composer was living in Vienna this was Beethoven. To young Franz this was a stimulus and a person to worship. This was plainly seen upon the death of Beethoven for we read that Schubert drank to the memory of him and of him who should soonest follow Beethoven to the grave. It was to himself that he thus drank, his physic and nerves could stand it no longer, dying two years later and buried in the cemetery three graves from Beethoven.

At the time of his death his worldly assets were valued at fifty shillings, including "a quantity of old music" containing we have since learned, many masterpieces.

His leading biographer says, "Schubert was under average height, round shoulders and back, with plump arms and hands. His face was round and puffy, with low forehead, thick lips, bushy eyebrows and a short turned-up nose carrying spectacles which hid fine eyes."

The public can not forget his "Erl King," "Wanderer," "Am Meer," "The Lady of the Lake," "Standchen" (Serenade) or his "Swan Song."

A very young man bought a very old car. Informing his father of this fact, he said: "I say, dad, be a sportsman. I need one or two accessories to complete the car. Will you give me one?"

"Very good," said his father, indulgently. "I'll give you a pedometer."

The son laughed.

"Why," he scoffed, "you've made a mistake. You mean a speedometer. A pedometer measures the miles you walk."

"Yes," said the father, grimly, "I know that."

"Wa-a-ll," said Bill, after expectorating copiously through the vestibule window, "as long as we're gonna have them airplanes up there agitatin' the heavens, we're gonna have busted up seasons, and I for one doubt if we'll ever have spring and summer and fall and winter on time any more.

GAVE HER THE SOUL CURE

Copyright by D. J. Walsh

Millie Marvin sat with her hands folded, staring at Elon's picture on the opposite wall. Her occupation each day since Elon's death two months before was to sit with empty hands staring at his picture, and each day her little, pointed body grew finer and finer like a copper wire whilst in being drawn out to its last dimension of tenuity. Any day the wise might grasp and Millie's soul would go forth to find her husband's.

Now Elon Marvin had been a good man—all the Marvins were steady and good and perfectly dependable—but it was only in his widow's sight that he had been anything but ordinary and stupid. As for his picture, it was like him, the ugly likeness of a man who had had to go on wearing whiskers when other men discarded them just because he looked better with half his face covered up. Elon was not easy to look at. Even his sister, Mrs. Todhunter, could say no more of him than he had "a dreadful good look."

But Elon had been Millie's only husband and she had been very grateful to him for marrying her and making her so happy as she had been. She had become his wife at eighteen when he had rescued her from her position as drudge in the overflowing household of her aunt, Hat Hawkins. To be transported to a home of her own with every comfort in life and some opportunity for having her own way had seemed little short of heaven to poor little Millie and she had never outgrown the surprise and thankfulness. Now with Elon gone she felt that her future life was of no account save all she spent it in adoration of his memory. The fact that he had been twenty years older than she and had suffered terribly from rheumatism toward the last made no difference in her feelings.

As she sat there with her eyes fixed in sad oblimation upon his ugly countenance the door opened and a woman looked at her from the threshold—a tall woman in dark blue with a thick suitcase in her hand.

"When you didn't hear the bell," the woman said, "I decided that the only thing left for me was to walk right in—"

"Why, Adelaide Draper!" Millie said faintly and uncertainly. Then she began to cry. "Elon's gone—Elon's gone."

"Oh, I know that," Miss Draper set down her suitcase and began to remove her coat and hat. "Lucy Todhunter wrote me. I've come to stay with you a spell, Millie. Aren't you glad to see me?"

"Elon's gone," Millie sobbed.

Adelaide cast her eyes up and sighed. Then she sat down and waited for something more. Nothing more came. Millie was so absorbed by her grief that she paid no heed to the guest. As a matter of fact Mrs. Todhunter, Elon's sister, had written to Adelaide a few days before:

"Do come and see if you can do anything with her. I can't do a thing and I'm afraid unless she can be aroused she will go into a decline, maybe lose her mind. You are one of her oldest friends; you knew her when she was a little girl, and you may be able to get her out of this dreadful state she is in."

"Well, Millie," Adelaide said after a half hour's silence, "it is getting teatime and I'm hungry. It is quite a journey from Wellsport. Will you get supper or shall I?"

"I don't care—I don't care," sighed Millie. Later when Adelaide came in from the kitchen she said: "I don't want a mouthful of anything. Please let me alone."

And Adelaide had to eat unaccompanied the meal she herself had prepared.

Things were little better next day. Millie ate little, said almost nothing and sat staring disconsolately at her beloved's crude countenance. But an hour after the midday meal she became aware of sound overhead. Drawers opened and closed, doors creaked, steps patted everywhere. Adelaide now! What was she doing upstairs?

"It sounds as if she were in my room," Millie thought. Yes, that was it! Adelaide was in her room. The idea! She arose and went upstairs just in time to meet Adelaide in the upper hall.

Neither spoke, and Millie went into her room. Nothing was disturbed, but still she was sure Adelaide had been there.

Now that she was upstairs she thought she might as well lie down and take a little rest. She had slept so little last night.

She had not lain there long when she heard Adelaide creep upstairs. She did not go into her room, but ascended further, to the attic. Millie lying there could hear her prying and poking for a full hour.

For years Millie's house had been her own, with no hands save hers to disturb certain parts of it, and to have a woman, who, however friendly, had no business to do so, peeking, had no business to do so, peeking her with resentment.

At supper she asked Adelaide:

"What were you doing in the attic this afternoon?"

Adelaide lifted her strong brows.

"Attic! Did you think you heard something?"

"I heard you."

"My!" was all Adelaide commented.

The following morning Adelaide stole away down cellar. Down cellar now! Glass tinkled as she rummaged in the fruit closet. Millie twisted uncomfortably in her chair and then trotted down cellar, only to find Adelaide coming up innocently with a basket of potatoes.

But that afternoon she was at it again, this time in Millie's room again. Click went a lock, bump went a drawer. This time Millie flew up stairs, and caught sight of the tail of Adelaide's dark skirt as she whisked into her own room.

It was the very next day that Millie, taking a peep through her bureau, missed her pearl brooch. It was gone from the pincushion where she always pinned it when she took it off. Her heart fluttered as she searched for it. Her pearl brooch that she had had so long, almost her only good ornament! Where could it be? At that moment she made another discovery. Her white silk blouse was gone—and a little bead purse that she suddenly remembered she thought a great deal of. She turned pale with apprehension. Could Adelaide have taken the things? But if not Adelaide then who?

Breathlessly she ran from the room downstairs, calling Adelaide's name. But Adelaide did not answer. Adelaide was gone! She had vanished from the house as if she had never been.

And now Millie was wild indeed. For the first time in two months she forgot her Elon and his demise. She was stirred to the depths by the absconding of her friend. Yes, absconding was the word. Adelaide had rummaged, taken what she wanted and gone! Adelaide, the upright, the loyal! What had come over her? Millie began to ponder, worry, try to find an excuse for her old friend. She wept for Adelaide, and then she remembered that she was hungry. She prepared a good meal and ate it.

Then she did what she had not done in two months; she dressed and started for Mrs. Todhunter's. It was a mile there—a good long walk, but Millie sped along. She had to have counsel from one she could trust.

As she opened Mrs. Todhunter's living room door the first thing she saw was Adelaide sitting quietly there sewing.

"Hello Millie!" she said unconcernedly.

Millie stared.

"Oh, Adelaide! I thought—I feared—"

"Oh, Adelaide! I thought—I feared—"

Mrs. Todhunter was at her side.

"I'm glad to see you, Millie. Adelaide's making me a little visit before she goes home. Take off your things and stay to supper."

Millie stayed. Other guests dropped in and they had a cosy time. Afterward Mrs. Todhunter said:

"It is storming quite a bit, Millie. You better stay here tonight."

That night Adelaide and Millie slept together.

"Adelaide, I think the world of you," Millie said. She was beginning to understand.

But she did not understand fully until she unwrapped the little parcel which Mrs. Todhunter gave her to take home. In it were the blouse, the brooch and the bead purse.

And now Millie knew of a certainty what a great kindness Adelaide, the keen-witted, had done for her.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

A PHILADELPHIA LAWYER

"That beats a Philadelphia lawyer"—"It would take a Philadelphia lawyer"; with slight variation this reference to a Philadelphia lawyer as particularly able and astute is a popular member of our slang lexicon.

Its origin, deeply imbedded in the legal and journalistic history of almost two centuries is brought to light with the story of John Peter Zenger, an Albany (N. Y.) newspaper publisher, who was indicted for criminal libel and successfully defended by Andrew Hamilton, Philadelphia lawyer in the year 1735.

The case attracted wide attention, the publisher being universally considered to be in the right although in a precarious position for lack of proof. The credit for his acquittal, which was hailed as a victory for the freedom of the press, was given unstintingly to Hamilton, his "Philadelphia lawyer," in the light of whose reflected glory a new expression was added to our language which has survived to this day.

With the license of usage, "Philadelphia lawyer" came to the employed on occasions with the implication of sharp dealing. This is true particularly of the New England section of the country where the saying is familiar that "Three Philadelphia lawyers are a match for the very devil himself." That this is a corruption of the term, however, is proven by scores of quotation covering a period of more than a hundred years in all of which the expression is used in accordance with its origin implying only astuteness, sagacity and unusual ability. The following, dated November 15, 1803, taken from "The Balance," a contemporary periodical, is an example:

"It would puzzle a dozen Philadelphia lawyers to unriddle the talk of the politicians."

Vol. XII. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, Thursday, December 6, 1928 No. 32

Will Dedicate Mission Chapel Here Sunday

St. James Lutheran Group Will Hold Special Services in Afternoon and Evening.

Dedicatory services for the new St. James Lutheran chapel at 45 Brinker Ave., one square south of Broad Street will take place Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

The sermon in the afternoon will be delivered by Rev. George Allenbach of Columbus, district missionary for Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, and Rev. C. H. Weber of Zanesville, will be the speaker at the evening services, which begin at 7:30.

The Ladies Aids of the mission and of St. James Congregation at Wittenburg will serve supper in the basement of the church.

This missionary undertaking is being sponsored by St. James Congregation of Wittenburg and has been made possible through the liberal contributions of the congregations of Lutheran churches of Springfield, Columbus, Hilliards, Chuckery, Marysville, Zanesville, Lancaster and Logan.

The chapel is a brick building occupying a space about thirty by forty feet with vestibules approximately ten by thirty feet in both front and rear. The basement is fully equipped, containing furnace room, kitchen, assembly room and lavatories. The second floor will be available for class instruction work.

Plans call for the erection of a church building on the adjoining property, at which time the chapel will be converted into a parsonage. The cost of the two lots and the building is estimated at $11,000.

West High Grid Schedule for 1929 Announced

Cowboys Take 12-8 Game From Aquinas; Kent Runs 75 Yards to Goal.

As the end of the football season arrives and as West High gridders came out from the bottom of the season pile up by winning from Aquinas 12-8 on Thanksgiving morning at Aquinas field, the schedule on the grid field for next fall is announced.

The Cowboys will open the season with Central on their own new field at the south end of the new million dollar high school building. The game will be played Sept. 28

WIN A SURPRISE

The win for the Cowboys on Turkey day was a surprise for all concerned, but was an interesting game from beginning to end. This is the eighth win in a row from Aquinas with the exception of last year when they tied.

The first touchdown came when H. Kent, Cowboy fullback, ran through left tackle for 75 yards. The try for the extra point by Adair was blocked.

The second touchdown was taken over by Dunlap from the one yard line after eight minutes of play in the second quarter. Aquinas scored on a touchdown and a safety in the last quarter.

BUSINESS MEN'S ASSOCIATION TO GIVE AWAY FORD SEDAN

About forty Hilltop merchants, all members of the Hilltop Business Men's association had signed up Wednesday to contribute to the expense of the new Ford Tudor sedan to be given away to someone who shops on the Hilltop, February 1.

"The members of the association are giving the car away as a gift in appreciation of the favors of the people of the Hilltop during the past year," stated Ray G. Haunts, president.

With the approach of Christmas and the usual heavy buying, Hilltop residents will have greater opportunity to get the car. Tickets will be given with each fifty cent purchase or with each fifty cents received on account.

These tickets will be retained by the buyer and the stubs should be deposited by the holder before February 1 in one of the boxes to be designated later.

Merchants will have the tickets to give with their purchases beginning today.

The Ford Tudor sedan will be on display at Voss Bros. within a few days and will be placed on display at various other points on the Hilltop later.

A committee will be named by the advertising committee to make final plans for the drawing and for the collection of the stubs at various points of the Hilltop.

The advertising committee is composed of J. E. Hite, M. W. Sellier, Rex Benefield, C. H. Campbell and R. G. Haunts. They will meet Friday afternoon.

GIVEN PRIZES BEFORE

Two years ago the merchants of the association by a similar method gave a car at Easter time and at the Hilltop picnic last August about $400 in cash prizes was given to Hilltop residents.

Merchants of the Hilltop have prepared for a record buying during the holiday season and have bought extra lines of holiday goods. They report that buying this year is above that of last season at this time.

Latin Dead?

Whoever said Latin was a dead language? It was not dead at the meeting of the Latin Club at West this week but very much alive when the group sang, "It Ain't Going to Rain No More," in Latin. They also sang the "Star Spangled Banner."

The rest of the program consisted of three reports on the lives and works of writers of the very earliest period of Roman literature. They were: Ennius by Margaret Karn; Plutus, by Jake Miles, and Terence, by Madge Markins. A discussion of current events and some Latin conundrums followed by the group.

A group of twenty-five girls under Miss Helen Skeele in the Household Arts Group at West High have made serviceable school dresses. The dresses are wool. One of the main problems is the fitting of the dresses as the girls all are in an advanced class and know all the stitches to be used. These girls are instructed in the art of selecting material and patterns to fit their individual types as well as how to make the garment.

"The Charm School," a comedy, will be presented by Glenwood young people on December 14 in the social rooms of the church, at 8:15. This will be the second program of this type presented by the group. Robert Blodgett will have the role of Austin Bevans and Miss Ona Butler will take the lead in the part of Elise Benedotti.

Protest to Ice Plant to Face Council Monday

Zoning Ordinance Change Fails to Meet Approval of City Planning Commission.

City planning commission has refused to approve the change of ordinance to permit the City Ice and Fuel Co., to erect an ice manufacturing plant on the fourth lot west of Hague Avenue on the north side of Broad Street and the matter will come before city council for a hearing on Monday evening.

Meanwhile the Hilltop Business Men's Association, through their attorney, Cecil J. Randall, has filed a protest with the planning commission and will be presented to meeting Monday.

OBJECTIONS CITED

The protest involves the following points:

1. The proposed change in the ordinance would permit any kind of business to be conducted in this section.

2. West Broad Street is the western gate to Columbus and it is the desire of the Hilltop Business Men's Association that it remain the same high class business and residential section that it now is.

3. To the north of this site is a fine neighborhood in which many people have bought their homes, relying on the permanent zoning ordinance to bar industrial plants.

4. A change in the zoning ordinance would set a precedent in other sections of Broad Street, that would be less desirable than under the present ordinance.

5. It would be spot zoning, thereby nullifying the benefits supposed to accrue under the zoning ordinance.

6. If changed the City Ice and Fuel Co., or their successors, would be allowed to manufacture great quantities of ice for distribution in the western section of the city, thereby multiplying and congesting the traffic at this point.

7. The board of education has recently completed a new million dollar high school two squares south of the plant and industrial plants are highly undesirable in the vicinity of a school.

8. West Broad School is one half block away and hundreds of children pass the point daily whose lives would be endangered by trucks loading at the sidewalks.

9. Operation of the plant would release ammonia fumes that would permeate the air of the neighborhood.

10. The Hilltop is free from industrial plants. A very desirable residential section is south of West Broad Street and the Masonic Temple and several churches are nearby.

11. This section of Broad Street is rapidly developing into a high class retail district and could not be maintained if such a plant was to be erected.

All interested in the matter are urged to be present at council meeting Monday night.

Youthful Air Pilot Lands Here on 3000 Mile Trip

A small blue Travelair biplane bearing the name "Spirit of American Youth," gracefully circled to earth at Sullivant Ave. airport Monday afternoon.

Richard E. James, a 17-year-old schoolboy of Flushing, N. Y., was the solitary youthful pilot, enroute to New York from the Pacific coast, and was completing the last lap of a transcontinental flight sponsored by the American Society for the Promotion of Aviation.

Flying officials predict that James will succeed where others have failed in this competition for a prize of $1,000 to be awarded the first boy or girl younger than 18 years, for spanning the continent.

The youthful flyer's parents joined him here, arriving in Columbus at 11:15 a. m., Monday, traveling in the "Aloha," monoplane piloted by Martin Jensen, who took second place in the Dole flight from Los Angeles to Honolulu, one year ago.

Tuesday morning at daybreak Mr. and Mrs. Forest James, the lad's parents, departed in the "Aloha" to accompany him on the dangerous flight over the Allegheny Mountains.

Shorty after leaving Columbus our youthful flier lost his way due to dense fogs and was compelled to return here twice before finally getting started on the last lap. Upon leaving Columbus young James stated that the trip from here to New York should not be difficult. He said: "I will have a favorable wind that will undoubtedly help me complete the hop."

Santa Claus Is Not Sick; Will Visit Hilltop Kiddies

Believe it or not, we haven't given up the idea of a Santa Claus and with this announcement the Record comes to the assistance of hundreds of Hilltop boys and girls proving that there is a Santa Claus.

In the first place, what would Christmas be without a Santa Claus? But we have further proof that there is a Santa Claus, because he was a visitor on the Hilltop two years ago, just before Christmas and Hilltop boys and girls who remember all the nice things they received last year will join in a loud chorus that he will come again in a few days.

Monday evening a little girl brought the following letter into the Record office and asked that it be printed so Santa might see it. So here is the letter in print and we are going to send a copy of the paper to Santa with a ring around the letter.

dear santa claus

some man told me that you were not coming because you were sick. I think you are coming because you have your displays in the windows.

any how Tommy my brother and I are going to look for you. Will you please remember all the boys and girls in columbus this year? who have not toys nor anything.

We still have some of our toys from last year and do not want much. We still have our lights for the tree that you brought last year. Be careful that you do not get hurt. I want two story books a little stove and what ever you think would be nice. I am seven years old, your friend,

Mary Ruth Huffman,
49 Clarendon Ave.

Mary Ruth is right. Santa is coming because he has his displays in the store windows and the Hilltop merchants are going to help him make this a big Christmas for every boy and girl on the Hilltop that has been good during the past year.

Santa may have been sick for a short time but he talked over the radio last night and said he was well again and wanted to have lots of letters from his little friends soon. But he asks that they be considerate and leave some of the selection to him, like Mary Ruth did, then the boys and girls will get some surprises.

THE BUSINESS MEN MAKE AN OFFER

Again the Hilltop Business Men's Association come out with a proposition of interest to Hilltop people. This time because of their work and contributions some Hilltop shopper will receive a new car on February 1.

In the past several such offers have been made and people have found them to be square in every detail. The same will be found in this case. Here is an opportunity for Hilltop people.

CUTTING THE LIBRARY APPROPRIATION

Hilltop residents have one of the most worthy institutions that have ever been founded at their disposal, namely the library. Having been open but a few weeks it has some hundreds of residents that are satisfied with its services and are regularily patronizing it.

Objections have been voiced against the short time the library is open. Some would have some evening hours. This thought we would likewise further.

But at the time we are thinking of more time there comes the chance that the present time may be cut in two by the cut in the appropriation for the year.

We agree with the city librarian, that the cut in the time of the present library would be a crime to those who are using it and will use it in the coming months. What we need is more time.

CHRISTMAS APPROACHES

December is here again and the holiday season has been evidenced since the first hour of Thanksgiving. Streets have been crowded with people looking here and there for gift bargains and the articles they desire for their friends.

To the people of the Hilltop it affords a rare opportunity to stay out of the crowded downtown shopping districts. Merchants of the Hilltop have laid in extra stocks and have articles of first-class to offer to people here. A comparison will show that nothing is saved or gained by going to the center of town for Christmas shopping.

Let your local merchant show his line of merchandise and then judge for yourself.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS

Back in the days when grandfather was a boy and sat up until about nine o'clock to see Santa Claus come peering through the door with his white whiskers, everyone in the house had their little gift to exchange.

Today things have changed. Just as the little boy no longer realizes great joy at the sight of Santa, but waits until morning for his expected toys, even so is it no longer the fashion for everyone to exchange gifts.

But then we look upon ourselves as being the wiser by having an understanding that no gifts are to be given. At the same time we are fooling ourselves into believing that we are saving thereby. But the truth is that never a Christmas morning goes by but that we have for the most part given presents that are far more expensive for the single item than we formerly gave for those for the whole family and sweethearts included.

THE CIRCUS

Just now as the radio is turned on and I try picking out the keys on the crack typewriter of the office (only one other to choose from) I feel like the circus world had suddenly driven up before the house and was proceeding to serenade me, for from some far away station comes the reproduction of a circus.

The bands are playing and all the air is filled with ballyhoo. It seems so real as the gentleman with the whiskers tells of all the wonders in the side show, including the five-legged calf and the sword swallower, that I am just about to throw down my last two bits for a ticket when I recall that I am at home, listening to a radio.

Probably the reason for all the back to normal thought was centered about a sudden shriek of static. But then what is a circus anyway?

THE TRUTH HURTS

That old gag about the truth hurting isn't so far off as it might be thought. If you don't believe it just try telling the truth to your friends for awhile and they will surely soon consider you a maniac or some such half wit.

Those who have their set ways of doing things and their regular religion to adhere to and their old family political party that dates back beyond the first branch of the family tree . . . well just try telling them something favorable about some other side of the question. The truth soon hurts to the extent that you are in danger of losing their friendship.

In such a case it is better to admit you are wrong and get away before another argument ensues.

ON BABIES

Having ambitions to become an editor some day or at east some one well enough known to newsreaders to have my name in the mast head of a one-horse country weekly, I make another one of those stabs that every editor must at sometimes make.

A word about babies. Once we were all such, at least we are told so when a few loud whimpers gives return words of disgust.

The college student has his ideas of what a baby is. For him she is a dazzling coed that has literally knocked him down. For the young boy of fifth grade, the babe is the youngster next door who isn't allowed to play out-of-doors after dusk. For the mother all her children are babies forever and she cares for them as she would a baby.

But then for a personal word concerning babies. They probably all look ugly to us unless they are of some relation that is close. But let them be in your own family and then they are as a part of you and nothing is so cute or sweet as that particular baby.

Which goes to show that whether it be baby or auto it is always the best if it is your own.

Ready with thousands of distinctive and practical gifts of quality and charm—Seiller's.

NEW PONTIAC SIX SOON ON MARKET

Announcement Comes at Close of the Company's Most Successful Year.

A Pontiac Six, now in practically everything but name, shortly will appear on the market, it was announced here today by the Oakland Motor Car Company.

A bigger, smarter, more powerful and more luxurious Pontiac, bringing big car features within the price range of the small six, was promised by the Oakland company.

This announcement comes near the close of the most successful year in the company's history with an estimated total output for 1928 of close to 270,000 units, forty per cent above 1927.

In preparation for 1929, extensive building projects under way for some time past now are practically completed, and will give the Oakland-Pontiac plant a capacity next year in excess of 350,000 cars.

Production of parts for the new car is now under way at the company plant, said to be the most modern and best equipped in the industry. The new Pontiac Six will be built almost entirely in factories owned by the Oakland Motor Car Company and the Fisher body plant at Pontiac, because the opening of new production units will enable Oakland in 1929 to build parts formerly manufactured elsewhere.

You will find many useful gifts at the Isaaur, Dec. 7 and 8, at Stites Electric Shop.

Much interest in the new Pontiac Six was evidenced in automotive circles because the Pontiac, first introduced in 1926, has since consistently shattered all previous sales records for a new make of car.

While embodying big car features and performance, the new Pontiac Six will remain within the price range of the smaller six, according to the announcement issued today. National showings will be held around the first of the coming year.

FURNISHES TOURIST INFORMATION

How fast automobile roads have been built or improved and how extensive automobile travel has become is indicated by statements in the Associated Tours Guide, published by The Automobile Club of America, headquarters New York City. This guide describes over 125,000 miles of favorite routes, tours, and itineraries; shows the numerical signpost system; prints motor laws and ordinances of the United States and Canada, and provides much other information for tourists. It would be interesting to discover how many automobiles were used this last summer for vacation touring.

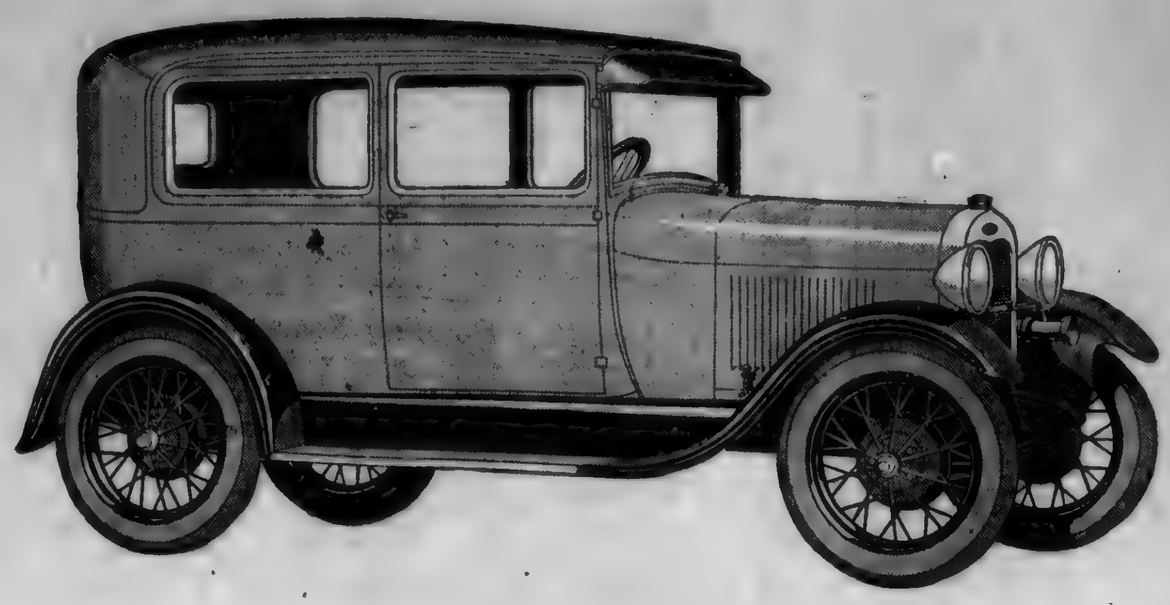
BRAND NEW PONTIAC IS COMING!



IN KEEPING with its policy of progress, Oakland has for months been working on a new Pontiac Six. It is more than a refinement of its famous predecessors. It is essentially a brand new car from beginning to end.

Details will be announced later. But this much can be said now. This new Pontiac will represent an even greater innovation today than the first Pontiac represented in 1926! Without departing from the low-price field, it will bring to this field fine-car elements of style, performance and luxury never before provided in a car so inexpensive to buy!

WATCH FOR FURTHER INFORMATION REGARDING

THE NEW PONTIAC 6

OAKLAND MOTOR CAR CO.
Pontiac, Mich.

WHO WILL GET THIS CAR?

Someone who shops on the Hilltop will get the above pictured new Ford Tudor Sedan. Everyone who buys from members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association will have an opportunity to get the car.

The car will be given away February 1. Ask your merchants for any information you may desire about it.

Who wouldn't be proud to drive this new car after February 1st? Every 50 cents spent with members of the association means another chance to get the car, now on display at Voss Brothers, Hilltop Ford Dealers.

Members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association are giving tickets with each 50 cent purchase or each 50 cents received on account between now and February 1. Each ticket entitles the holder to one chance on the car, when the public drawing is held.

Announcement of where the stubs of your tickets may be left will be made within a few days. Then deposit your stubs and keep the ticket until the day of the public drawing for the car. Every ticket means another chance to secure this new Ford.

Your Opportunity

Here is an opportunity of a lifetime for someone. Christmas is here and everyone will be buying more than usual. If you buy from the members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association you may be the owner of this new car after February 1.

Hilltop Merchants

In appreciation of the business they have received during the past year members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association are taking this opportunity to make a gift to someone on the Hilltop by presenting this new Ford sedan February 1.

Service, Quality and personal consideration....these are the things that members of the Hilltop Business Men's Ass'n are striving to give people of the Hilltop. Your suggestions of how they may better serve you will be appreciated at all times. Bear in mind the value of the community merchant to the community itself and the part the Hilltop merchant plays in making this a better residential section. The members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association are always ready and willing to serve you individually.

HAMILTON MARKET TO HAVE FOOD SHOW

A food show for housewives of the Hilltop is being sponsored by Hamilton Market, 2453 Sullivant Ave., Friday evening, at which time demonstrations of many kinds will be given.

Mr. Hamilton, who has just recently installed in his store a new self serve system that is different, states that his new methods have met with much satisfaction. All the food products are on display in such a way that shopping is simplified and the housewife has a greater opportunity to select her groceries and save herself much time.

Rhodes Jazz Band will be present at the food show Friday night. Bags of groceries will be given to the visitors.

STUDENTS WORKING TO GAIN EXPERIENCE

Salesmanship Class Furnishes 14 for Christmas Work In Stores.

Students in the salesmanship class at West High school are employed at various stores and businesses during the month before Christmas. Each one has a grading sheet which is marked by the employer.

Those working this year are: Edna Kuntz, clerk for Kroger; Fred Maier at a United States grocery; Helen Meinhard at Bornhain and Cahen; Endora Trabue at Atlantic and Pacific grocery.

Lyle Jones serves a filling station and Ruth Miller at the West Broad restaurant. Charles Pfaltzgraph makes concrete pavements and Glen Markins sells real estate.

Students' Faults Aid Shoe Fund

Necessity as the mother of invention again came to the front with a plan that has been successful in raising money for the shoe fund at West High school.

The fund had met with success in all the rooms except that of Mrs. Norma McCoy and so she appealed to the students for aid.

One boy made a box and a girl made a poster and on the blackboard were written the words, "Those doing the following things shall be fined"—

Chewing gum, five cents.
No homework, five cents.
Not studying in registration, five cents.
Whispering, one cent.
Writing notes, one cent.
Snapping fingers, one cent.

Mrs. McCoy told the rest of her classes of this plan. They liked it and immediately adopted the plan. Each class elected a detective who visits each culprit, demanding the fines.

One girl persisted in snapping her fingers in her anxiety to recite. So when the detective asked her for the penny she said, "There is a nickel, now I have four more snaps coming."

So in this manner Room 9 has accumulated over $3.00 for the shoe fund.

NEW Y.W.C.A. BUILDING TO OPEN JANUARY 13

Swimming, Gymnasium, Dancing and Bowling Class to Start Then.

Miss Avis Dinsmore, health education director, and Miss Dorothy P. Powell. Miss Roberta Johnston and Miss Angeline Grenn, assistant directors, will be in charge of all activities.

World Needs Mountaineers Says Head of N. C. College

"Our supreme interest in the mountaineers of North Carolina lies in the fact that the outside world needs that reservoir of youth," said McCoy Franklin, president of Crossmore College in an address at Hoge Memorial church Sunday evening.

Franklin opened his address by describing the only Sunday school he ever attended until he was 21 years of age. He gave a word picture of sunrise in the mountains and imitated the many birds of his section of the country. "These were my teachers and the great outdoors was the classroom," he said.

Then by way of telling of the lives of others in the mountains he "tore a page from the story" of his own life.

"At the age of 21 I walked two and a half miles over the mountains to the cabin of a missionary doctor and his wife. The lady read a chapter from the Bible and I asked if I too might be able to get an education, for I thought these two people knew more than anyone else in the world.

"She replied by saying that anyone who was willing to work could get anything that was good for them. Until this time I had never owned a dollar or seen a newspaper. I couldn't read or write and had never seen a railroad train.

"There were 15 in our family, and father, when visitors came used to apologize for the smallness of the family because others usually had larger ones. I remember attending one man's birthday celebration at which there were 89 grandchildren and 54 great-grandchildren.

"This meant that every member must stay at home and help raise enough corn to bread the family for the winter. Poverty seemed to prevail. The houses have from one to two rooms and I remember visiting twleve homes in which there was but one chair in the whole number. I ate at one of the homes and they had one knife and one fork on the table."

Franklin explained how the young people in the mountains walked to church in snow in weather 18 degrees below zero without shoes and few clothes on their backs.

"I was happy when I was 21. I sold all my earthly belongings, which consisted of a calf, a pig and three chickens and with the first money I had ever earned I took my trunk on my back and headed for Berea College. I had heard that I could go to school if I had $10 on which to start."

At Berea he worked for seven cents per hour and went to school. Here he went through grade school, high school, college and theological seminary.

With an interest in his own people in the mountains he went back to the old missionary and his wife and established what is now known as Crossmore College. In thirteen years it has grown from a one-room building to a 13 and an eight-room building with modern conveniences and a 100-acre farm for experimentation.

There are 500 students enrolled at present, all of which are mountaineers. Many begin going to school at ages from 18 to 30 years. It is financed by the sale of old clothing to the mountaineers. This clothing is sent in from all parts of the country. Their motto is "Something for everyone." The clothes aid the residents and at the same time the money is used to educate their children.

"There lies the greatest problem of today," Franklin stated. "Those people must come out of the mountains. If they are educated they will be leaders. If they are untrained they will fall before the first temptation they meet. They will be active—either the best or the worst."

Used Clothes Wanted

Receptacles will be placed in Hoge Memorial church Thursday for clean used clothing of any description which will be sent at an early date to Crossmore school, Crossmore, N. C. Used clothing is sorted and sold at a low price to the mountaineers of the community, who remake the garments for their families.

Even patches of left over materials are salable for making quilts, comforters and braided rugs. From the sale of second hand clothing, several buildings have been erected at Crossmore school.

Council Favors Ice Co. In Spot Zoning Action

Grants Permission to Manufacture Ice at Hague and Broad Plant.

By a four to three vote Monday night city council gave permission to the City Ice and Fuel company to erect an ice manufacturing plant at Hague and Broad street, disregarding protests of about twenty-five Hilltop businessmen and the Hilltop Business Men's Association through their lawyer, Cecil J. Randall.

Councilmen Green, Lewis and Karnes were in favor of rescinding the action of council a few weeks ago when they granted the permission. The matter stood without change, however, when the four other councilmen would not change their vote.

Spot zoning was put into effect through the action of council, since the planning commission did not favor the change in the ordinance which makes that section for business only.

The vote of the four other councilmen was based on the fact that the plant will eliminate many of the trucks running over West Broad street from downtown. They state that 15,000 tons of ice were hauled over the street last year.

Council voted to rescind its action of a few weeks ago whereby they prohibited the use of the city parks for playgrounds by the children.

Thy Works Praise Thee

How wondrous are the things that God created,
The firmament, the sun to rule by day;
The moon to glow at night with mystic splendor;
Surrounded by the stars in bright array.

The grass, a carpet green, like emerald velvet
And flowers, sweet, exotic, common, rare;
Each lovely tone, each tint pure and modest violet,
Their fragrance shed like incense on the air.

The mountains high with peaceful valleys resting
Close at their feet: the glory of the trees
With arms outstretched invite the weary traveler,
And clap their hands at every zephyr's breeze.

The sunrise, with its promise of fair skies,
That those who strive will surely win the goal;
The sunset and the harmony of twilight,
Like benedictions rest upon the soul.

The fleecy clouds that drift across the heavens,
The rains that fall refreshing all the earth,
The oceans deep, the hills, and all creation
Proclaim His Sovereign power—who gave them birth.

—Virginia Eaton.

ODD MINERAL MINED IN UTAH

Gilsonite, one of the world's oddest minerals, is mined only in the State of Utah. It is a brilliant-black, asphaltic substance, and is used in the manufacture of varnish, paint, electrical insulation, inks, telephone mouthpieces, electric-switch handles, and knobs and buttons of various kinds.

Gilsonite was discovered in the Ashley Valley in the Uinta Basin, Utah, several years after the first white men had settled in the valley in 1878. The settlers discovered veins of a brilliant-black substance in various parts of the basin. At first this substance was thought to be a variety of coal. When burned, however, it gave off large quantities of dense, black smoke with a peculiar odor, and instead of reducing to ashes the material melted and drew out into tarlike threads.

The first discovery was probably made in 1862 at what was then called the Culmer vein. Samuel H. Gilson became interested in the deposits and spent many years in his efforts to find a market for the mineral. When Gilson's efforts finally developed a market, the name gilsonite had become firmly attached to this substance, and it is now so known throughout the world.

The supply of gilsonite in the Uinta Basin seems almost inexhaustible.

"Bandits must increase their numbers"

PRACTICE WHAT YOU PREACH

"I have noticed," said Mel Pullen one day last week, "that the fellow who complains so much about what the other person is doing can be caught at the same trick quite often."

And he continued by citing an example. It appears that the perpetual complainer was giving his objections to a matter that had interested many others and had been approved by the majority. All his arguments had been broken down, however, and his last words were merely verbal epithets, for he blamed the others with the one thing he was so accustomed to do and failed to notice the effect it was having upon his listeners.

Herein lies the big fault of grumbling about what others do. It is so terribly hard to practice what we preach.

SHOOTING IRONS

Out west where men and women have their way as much as in the east, it has long been held as the home of shooting irons and the place where they have been used so freely.

But now the shooting iron has a different place in the day's business and is used for practical purposes other than for gang wars in Chicago.

The local banks are training their men in pistol shooting and similar contests are conducted for the police force of the city. Practices in the banks are with pistols shooting nine times. This being the case the future banditry must be conducted in gangs of ten to assure at least one escape.

GENIUS SUBMERGED

There is hardly a reason for a person to believe that genius is ever submerged to the extent that it will always remain in the dark. Every day we are witnessing cases that further prove that the good of a man will be out.

And this particular good I have reference to is his ability in whatever line of work he undertakes.

If a person is a genius or has ability he will make his own mark. There is a certain amount of work on the part of others required but that is but another item in the list of good qualities. The particular person has shown his ability before, and it is remembered later to advance his cause.

TO THOSE WHO HAVE

Everyone is familiar enough with that phrase. "To those that have shall be given," and many have wondered why it should be so.

It is simple enough with a little consideration of what it means. The person who has either wealth or friends or what it may be, has shown his ability.

Then, tomorrow when someone is needed for a particular purpose that demands responsibility the man of experience or the one that has been tried before is the one called upon. And in this way is it given.

MAKING WEATHER MAP

The Smithsonian Institute at Washington is mapping out the weather of the world on a single chart. Weather conditions reported by 257 observing stations in both hemispheres go into the making of the chart, which is the first of its kind.

And what is Christmas to the little girl without a doll? You might well remember the hundreds of such youngsters that will not get such a gift. The Salvation Army will be glad to receive your dolls and in this way some little girl's Christmas will be made brighter.

A look at the calendar will show us that a big week-end is in store with Sunday, wash day and Christmas coming in a row.

CHRISTMAS SHOPPING

It won't be long now until Dad will get a fresh supply of neckties and handkerchiefs.

* * * * *

Handkerchiefs are things one can't well do without on a cold day but why tempt another person's nose with such a thing on Christmas morn?

* * * * *

We notice that department stores are advertising their "beautiful stock of hankies" and have even turned whole departments over to their sale. What further evidence could one want that the well known rag is the universal gift article.

* * * * *

It wouldn't be so bad if the giver would attach a little car with some variety of suggestions such as, "To Polish the Car," "Use for a Pocket Towel," or "Use for First Aid."

* * * * *

But instead of that they expect us to remember them with every blow. So let it be. Handkerchiefs will soon reign again.

For the long month the post office department and stores have been urging the people to do their Christmas shopping early. All indications are that at least half a dozen persons have bought a few articles in their spare moments.

* * * * *

And while the tiny tots about the house are trying to figure out how Santa will get down the narrow chimney, mother is trying to figure out how she can get in the front door with her packages.

* * * * *

Can you remember way back when you never suspected that the man in the long white whiskers was "your old man?"

* * * * *

The husband with the right idea of economy will give his wife a ton of coal or a basket of groceries.

* * * * *

And the fellow with the new hide on his hands might well show the yuletide spirit by presenting a cook book. Herein lies danger of a good case of alimony, however.

* * * * *

This is the time of the year when we can more truthfully say that children can fool their parents but parents can't fool their children.

* * * * *

Prohibition officers say there is going to be less Christmas spirits exchanged than before but half the papers of the country are writing advance stories and headlines on how the alcohol went on a rampage.

NORMAL COLLEGE ADDED TO ALASKA AG COLLEGE

According to the United States Daily, a two-year normal course is being added to the curriculum of the Alaska Agriculture College and School of Mines at Fairbanks. Graduates of the new course will be certificated to teach in the schools for Alaskan natives, where their familiarity with the climate and the general conditions of the territory will be of advantage to them. The work of a teacher in Alaska includes help in the promotion of native industries, domestic arts, personal hygiene, village sanitation, and morality, as well as the elementary subjects usually taught in the schools.

NEW KIND OF NERVE

A colored woman was telling a North side matron about a friend of hers whose eyes were defective. "They never will be much better," she said, "for you know the obstacle nerve is affected."

Deaths

MARY E. JEFFERS

Mrs. Mary E. Jeffers, widow of Lewis H. Jeffers, civil war veteran, died Monday, Dec. 3, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. G. B. Myers, 142 Westmoor Ave. Funeral services were held at Jerseyville, O., with interment in the Christian cemetery there. She is survived by another daughter, Mrs. R. E. Wilson, and three sons, John L., Dow E. and Samuel, all of Athens. Burial by Cook and Spears.

AIRPLANE WING SLOTS

Captain De Haviland, English airplane expert, made a test of the newly invented Handley-Page wing slots which are to make airplanes foolproof. De Haviland "deliberately pointed his Moth plane at the ground, crashed and stopped from the shattered fuselage unhurt." The wing slots prevent an airplane from falling vertically at a rate of more than nine miles an hour, and give the pilot more control over his airplane at all times.

In complete Christmas readiness at Seiller's.

NO ONE MET

Teacher—Can any one tell me the meaning of the word "collision?" No one knows? Well, it is when two things come together unexpectedly. Now, can any one give me an example? All right, Johnny, what is it?

Johnny—Twins.

Be on hand to meet Santa at Seiller's at 2 o'clock Saturday.

PROGRESSIVE JAPANESE CITY

The city of Osaka, Japan, is awaiting central government approval for the construction of a rapid transit system, 29 miles of which will be subway and 18 miles elevated. It is expected the project will require eight years for completion at a cost of about $60,000,000.

Santa arrives at Seiller's 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

The herons of Germany have been always regarded as one of the picturesque features of that country, but the fisheries interests have been instrumental in having a bounty placed upon the birds as it is claimed they draw unduly upon the fish supply. But there are arguments to be made in favor of the heron's presence and the pros and cons are having quite a time.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

EASILY DISCOURAGED

The man or woman who is easily discouraged, who is not willing to work with patience and wait for results, who mopes and desponds if everything sought and planned for does not come at once, will find existence not only very unhappy, but almost unbearable.

It is good to have ambition, but if ambition be lacking of the redeeming attributes of resignation and sane control, it is apt to bring nothing but mere shreds of disappointment.

The young who have just stepped from the shadows of the old university building, with diplomas in hand, feeling in their confidence and exaltation that the world is waiting to reward them with riches and honors, will in a little while if lacking of mental equipoise, find themselves sorely tried.

There is no period of life in which self-deception is easier.

The fates play their seductive music with deft fingers.

The welkin rings with the joyous songs of victors marching forth with flaring flags.

In reality the green companies are just forming to be instructed in the first maneuvers of the hard drill.

All along the line the veterans cheer and clap, and about words of encouragement which the old fellows know will be needed when the guns first pop and the raw recruits get in action.

These gray heads are not of the sort that flirt with discouragement. Not one of them was ever known to declare that he had balked in the face of duty.

The stars they are wearing were won by cool bravery.

When the storms of life beat upon them, when the marching was rough and deprivation tried their spirits, when the heat oppressed them and the cold chilled their marrow, they held the stronger to courage.

They early learned how to serve others. This was the heart rending drill, but when they were through with it, they found themselves in position to make a record of their own.

The pages of history are glorious with the deeds of such men. Follow their footsteps.

Let neither long hours nor weariness discourage you.

Be sincere and lose no opportunity to correct your conduct.

Be loyal to the man who every week fills the pay envelope. Be loyal to yourself and to your dependents.

Never lose faith, nor suppose that all men are cheats, because once in a while you have happened to stumble upon a knave.

HUNT OSTRICHES WITH AUTO

Ostriches were hunted by a party in Arabia which followed the running birds in an automobiles. When the ostriches were tired a man had only to stand on the running board to catch the birds around the neck and drag them alive into the car. Being exhausted, the captured birds lay still in the car.

They Landed a Fat Commission

By LILLIAN B. MITCHELL

(Copyright)

John Bainbridge was gulping the last drop of coffee at the breakfast table with one eye on his watch, which was propped up before him, and one eye on the boarder who sat across the table. He did not want to be late again, for old Manson was getting grouchy of late. When the waitress came in and said that Mr. Manson was on the telephone and wished to speak to Mr. Bainbridge, John fairly gasped.

"There are half a dozen agents out there right on the ground to show this fellow the place," he heard Manson saying. "Nevertheless, I think that we should be represented. I'll leave the car at the corner and go downtown the rest of the way on the 'L.' You skip out there and hang around. If we could make the sale it would mean a fat commission for you, Bainbridge. Go to it. Get it!"

Bainbridge thought of the fine day in the country where he was going. He wished that he knew some charming girl to take with him, somebody who loved the smell of clean, fresh country air.

He stopped before the Adams house and Eloise herself answered the door. She blushed scarlet when she saw him and asked him to step inside. "I got up late," she began apologizing, "and I haven't had a chance yet to—"

"Oh, well, never mind," John Bainbridge cut in: "I had to drive out to the country and I thought—" he eyed her soiled frock distastefully.

"If you'd phoned," she began, "but now it would take me a half hour—"

At Anna Compton's the maid answered the door, a saucy maid, who did not trouble to go upstairs, but called up that a gentleman wanted to see Miss Anna. He heard Anna's voice, now more on the querulous order than the lilting, laughter-loving voice that he knew.

"That doorbell wakened me! Send him away; he's probably a man wanting to sell something!"

It was an almost dazed young John Bainbridge who again stepped into the sedan belonging to the Acme Realty corporation. The time was fleeting and he must start out for the long drive that was ahead of him. He could not risk being late, and yet it seemed a pity to take such a good drive alone when some one else might as well enjoy it, too. He saw a few familiar houses and remembered. Mary O'Brien lived along here in one of these houses. He saw the very house now and undecidedly drew up at the big white stone in front that pointed out the fact that they had once had enough "carriage company" to use a block.

Here again the girl of the house answered the door—Mary O'Brien herself. Her hair was smooth and prettily dressed and her shoes were well polished. Her apron, though, was a mass of blue and yellow streaks.

"Hello, Jackie!" she greeted with a wide smile. "Thought you never were going to come around any more. Come on in."

"I can't," he temporized. "I stopped just for a minute. You see, I'm going to take a long drive out into the country to try to sell a wealthy commercial artist a gentleman's country place and I had room in the car and thought maybe you'd like to drive along."

Her eyes danced. "I'd love it!"

"But," he went on evenly, "I—I thought maybe you'd be dressed enough to go."

But Mary was already tugging at her apron that covered her from neck to hem. "The kitchen needed painting and I thought that Mary O'Brien house artist, might as well do the job. But I'm all dressed. Just let me get a hat and cover the paint jar so it won't dry up."

She now had the apron off and a neat dark blue frock was revealed.

And all the way out to the town where the wealthy commercial artist lived, or rather was stopping at the hotel, Mary O'Brien told him of all that had happened since she had last seen him, and John Bainbridge found himself laughing as he had not laughed for months. She sat in the back of the car while he drove the prospect about, and when the house was shown Mary made several suggestions as to what might be accomplished here and there with a little paint.

It was a surprised John Bainbridge who heard the commercial artist suggest a check to bind the bargain until his attorneys could look up the title.

"You'll have to take half the money," Bainbridge told Mary.

She laughed and shook her head.

"But I never would have sold him alone!" expostulated John. "He liked the way you told him to fix up that solarium and the little room off the study. "He said I had a fine little wife," he ended wistfully. "Mary, why not—"

"I told mother I'd be home for lunch," said Mary, her eyes straight ahead and her cheeks very pink.

"And the commission is enough on that one piece alone to get our furniture," said John Bainbridge his eyes on the narrow strip of road ahead. "Wasn't it lucky, Mary, that you were dressed and ready!" And he smiled as he thought of Eloise and Anna.

Sheer Print Velvets Revel In A Riot of Enchanting Color

Life in the modish world is just one velvet frock after another. One really cannot qualify as a full-fledged fashion follower who does not acquire several frocks and ensembles of velvet, this season.

To "play the game" up to the mode's standard, one simply must, in addition to a handsome ensemble of monotone velvet, indulge in a beguiling afternoon frock of colorful print velvet.

It is a very strong minded woman, indeed, who can withstand the wiles of a frock like the one in the picture. The velvet for this winsome model is most exquisite, both in its sheer dainty texture and its gorgeous chestnut brown and rust colorings. If its ruddy autumn tones do not lay seige to your fancy, then the same patterning is available in deep blue or wine or dark green for the basic color.

A dress of prettily patterned transparent velvet bears the same relation to the winter mode as did the flowery chiffon to past summer fashions. That is, it is a gown which is a most happy possession, in that it is ever ready, always flattering, and the sort which never fails to solve the "what-to-wear" problem.

The very newest print velvets adopt tiny repeat designs in lovely blended colorings. Their patternings favor both small florals and diminutive geometricals. Since there is such rivalry between printed and plain velvet, a charming compromise is affected by fashioning the costume blouse of the print, the skirt and jacket or long coat being of the solid color. It gives a softly feminine silhouette, if the skirt be styled with plaited ruffles, for modern velvet yields so pleasingly to this treatment.

Not only is print velvet voguish for frocks. Smart shops are showing most fetching sets of handbag, scarf, hat and belt made of gay printed velvet. These replace similar sets in printed crepes which were so popular during the summer months. It's a question which will score the greatest triumph this winter—these matching sets of patterned velvet or those made of supple thin fur which is manipulated in a fabric-like manner.

LAST VOLUME NEW DICTIONARY ON PRESS

After seventy years of work, the tenth and last volume of the "New English Dictionary," commonly called the Oxford Dictionary, is in the press. Sir John Murray, who planned it, began with A in 1882 and lived to see U go to press in 1915. His successors have finished it for him. Of course it is not complete—no dictionary can be—for new words and new uses come up every year. There are among the 414,047 words the word "appendicitis" does not appear, as it had not come into use in 1888 when the other A's were collected. However, Dr. Murray was a great philologist, and in the matter of literature, etymology, and so on, this work excels. One word which takes only a few inches in an ordinary lexicon occupies twenty-one columns in the Oxford Dictionary.

With furs, copper, gold, platinum, and other precious products the "barren" territory has yielded more than $1,133,000,000 over the original investment.

Business Is Good Say Business Men

Members of Association State That Holiday Sales Will Reach New Mark.

Business is good according to Hilltop merchants and they state that the Christmas season has been one of the busiest they have experienced in many years.

Further proof of the heavy shopping in the past few weeks is shown in the number of tickets members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association have given out with those purchases. The number has exceeded that of any other similar routing held during the year. One Man Killed Another Injured By Street Cars

Accidents Occur in Two Days Within Few Blocks of Each Other.

Within 24 hours and a few blocks apart two men were struck by street cars early this week. One died of the injuries received and the other is in a critical condition.

Frank Parker, 45, head carpenter at the State hospital, where he resides his home, is in St. Carmels hospital after being struck by a street car Tuesday evening about 6 o'clock at Whittemore avenue and West Broad street.

Police removed him to the hospital. Examination disclosed a fractured skull and broken leg. He had not regained consciousness Wednesday.

James Hackett, aged 60, of 2813 West Broad St. died in the Hall-Light Hospital early Tuesday morning after he had been struck by a street car Monday evening at West Broad Street and Oakley Avenue. He suffered a fractured skull.

He was crossing the street when the accident occurred. Motorman of the car was H. H. Bowley, 655 Nashoba Ave. and conductor was Hop Vanatta, 105 Hawkes Ave.

Hackett had lived in Columbus about two years coming here from London where he was a farmer. He lived with a brother, John Hackett.

He leaves another brother, Eugene Hackett, Phoenix, Ariz.; two sisters Mrs. John Lanigan of London and Mrs. Mary Penner of London.

Funeral services were held Thursday at 8:30 a. m. from the Catholic Church at London and burial in the Catholic Cemetery by Rev. E. Likens of London.

Paul Robb, aged 6, 162 E. Ogden Ave., was struck by a truck driven by O. K. Criswell of Newark, Monday morning as he was crossing Broad Street. He suffered minor injuries.

The car driven by Henry R. Schultz, 430 S. Burwin Ave. collided with another at South Terrace and Sullivant avenue, 705 Macias Ave., driver of the other car, was not injured although the car turned over.

The car driven by A. G. Ahlemann, 64 E. Woodrow Ave., struck Otis Berry of West Jefferson St. West Broad Street near Alton, Monday night. Berry's left leg was amputated.

Ice Company Bill Tabled for Week

Throws Favorable Light on Proposed Spot Zoning at Hague and Broad.

On the motion of Councilman Klapp, who last week protested in favor of granting permission to the City Ice and Fuel Co. to erect an ice manufacturing plant at 2778 West Broad St., the bill was tabled Monday night until next meeting of Council.

This throws a favorable light on the situation and the action of the committee when the final vote is taken may be against the establishment of the plant despite the fact that they voted four to three for it in committee meeting last week.

Merchants and residents owners in the vicinity continue to object to the change because they cite it as spot zoning. A map of the ice plant and any such protested actions may be taken if the first step is taken now.

Members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association urge those interested to be present at council meeting Monday night.

IS PRESENTED CUP AT SQUAD BANQUET

EDWIN OKEY

Featuring the second annual football banquet of the YMCA Day School for Boys last week was the surprise presentation which the members of the 1928 squad staged for Coach Ed Okey, 2823 Sullivant Ave. After he had completed the presentation of letters and honors to 27 men including Walden Dymis, 183 E. Burgess Ave., he was puzzled at the request of the captain of the team that he "wait a minute."

In the course of a minute a handsome loving cup was uncovered and presented to the coach as evidence of the appreciation of squad members for his work during his first season as coach of major sports in the T Day school. Okey is also associated with the physical department of the metropolitan Y. M. C. A.

Observe Christmas 4 Times in One Place

There is one place where Christmas is kept three times a year—in the Church of Nativity at Bethlehem, the reputed site of the Stable of the Inn.

The Roman, Greek and Armenian-Greek bodies have each their respective section of the church, but their Christmas celebrations do not occur on the same day. The Latin Christmas is celebrated at the Roman Catholic altar on December 25. Thirteen days later the Orthodox Easterns perform the Greek rite. Another 12 days later the Armenian church keeps its own celebration of the Byzantine faith.

PEACE ON EARTH, GOOD WILL TOWARD MEN

For the past month preparations have been made for the most looked-forward-to day of the year—Christmas.

Tuesday will climax all expected joys and a feeling of good will toward everyone will be prevalent. Both young and old will delight in the happiness of each other.

Not only in our own particular community or before our own hearth will this atmosphere be spread out, but abroad and throughout the nations of the world will there be

"Peace On Earth, Good Will Toward Men"

BUSINESS IS GOOD

A general feeling of good will is being extended by Hilltop merchants and there is good reason for such according to their reports of net business during the holiday season.

Residents of the Hilltop have found the local stores well supplied with Christmas goods and a general feeling of satisfaction prevails. Business has been good.

Who could be so bold as to say "There ain't no Santa Claus" when there are so many on the streets.

Again the country comes to the city in the form of Christmas trees, but we just must have of back to nature moments.

About the greatest boon to humanity is the man who runs the sidewalk shoe shine parlor and leaves his awnings down while it is raining.

The turkey that was thankful for escaping the ax at Thanksgiving time has something to worry about now.

The Spectator

The newspaper that is of service is fearless.

THE NEWSPAPER GAME

Probably to one interested in newspapers there is nothing so enjoyable as to be able to hear those who have had experiences tell them.

It was my good luck to be able to sit in on a meeting of newspaper men, students of journalism and professors of the same one evening last week. Time soon passed without notice amid reminiscence and exchange of stories in the newspaper game, and furthermore all present expressed themselves as being delightfully pleased with journalism as a profession and newspaper work as an enjoyable employment.

WHAT THE EDITOR SAYS

Paul Bellamy, editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, and L. Eugene Judd, editor of the Akron Times-Press, were the principal speakers of the evening. Things pertaining to newspapers that are talked from day to day by everyone were discussed by them and in this way I relay some of the most interesting points.

In the first place I begin by following their advice in regard to telling the world the part the newspaper reporter plays in the days news.

"It is generally accepted that the reporter is the lowest paid member of the staff and in all probability is the least intelligent. This, however, is untrue and the reporter is in truth the backbone and life of every paper, and in many cases the reporter is receiving a wage that far exceeds that of the graduate of law school who has seen several years of service under his own shingle.

The newspaper profession is a respectable one and its employees must be paid a respectable salary in order to maintain the dignity that is due the press.

CRIME NEWS

Mr. Judd, a personal friend of the late Don Mellett, murdered at Canton by a gang from the underworld, was in Canton following the murder and had a big part in clearing up the mystery.

This he cites as a typical case where the public should know what is going on and be able to make up its mind.

Newspaper men of Ohio under the direction of Judd went into Canton and played the story of the Mellett murder up to the point where people were ready to demand action. The murder itself was solved through the efforts of the press in exposing the gangs and their connection with the police force.

The newspaper that is of service is fearless. Don Mellett, himself a newspaperman, was killed because he was fearless and dared to print the names of those concerned in the crookedness of Canton. The result has been that a notorious gang has been cleaned up due to the service of newspapers.

THE RADIO VS. NEWSPAPERS

Have you ever thought of what the future of newspapers might be with the development of the radio and the coming of television? Reports say that even the radio will soon be a thing of the past. Instead we will call the telephone company and ask for a certain program from London or New York, to cost less than radio.

But regardless of this fact there are other points to consider that make us realize that newspapers will contribute to operate hand in hand with whatever inventions come or go.

In the first place it would take a man more than six hours to get all the news over a radio that he can summarize from the printed page in thirty minutes. Besides people want the written word and the writers impression.

THE WOMAN'S PLACE

Women in journalism are becoming more and more popular with the feminist movement that is spreading everywhere. From those who have had experience in dealing with women writers comes the thought that the women's interests must be taken care of by feminine writers and that women are appealing to the general news-reading public through their ability to make their stories emotional.

In the words of Mr. Bellamy, women in journalism are different enough to be exceedingly interesting.

HERE AND THERE

By C. C. H.

Henry Ford says all this advice to the younger generation is not so true as it sounds. For instance, in his belief, success isn't based on working hard and saving as much as it is on investing the money one makes for self improvements. The trouble with so many is that the improvements must be left alone until the pleasures are taken care of.

Headline: "Bums Named to Head Hunters." What is this we have here? Sounds like there might be a cannibal around.

The gold digger of '49 got cold feet from wading in the streams but the gold digger of '29 will get most anything she wants if she finds the proper soft stream.

The all-America football teams have all been chosen and there are few stars in the country that haven't made at least one team.

Newspapers have one more chance to cash in on Christmas advertising after the holidays. The Scotch will advertise their slightly used Christmas trees.

Well folks it won't be long now. Soon another national necktie and handkerchief day will be with us again.

TO CREATE HOMESTEADS

The Literary Digest states that a project to increase the population of Canada has been laid before the Dominion Parliament, the prediction being that within a decade it would add 2,000,000 to Canada's census figures, involving the settlement of about 50,000,000 acres of land. The plan is to clear partially the scrublands, divide them into homesteads, and allot them as settlers. The land would be free of taxes for five years, and subject to no charge beyond the cost of clearance and the erection of farm buildings. The estimated cost of a homestead is $1,000, and for an additional log house and barn $500. The solitude of the district is not so unbearable as it was in pre-war days, and many of the leaders believe this an excellent way to bring to the section a stable population of families to augment the few hermits, traders, and trappers who hold it at present.

You'll do better at Seiler's after all.

The University of Nebraska located at Lincoln, offers a number of courses which may well be taken by students who expect later to enter schools of theology or to prepare for social-and-religious service.

PROVE STORIES OF GIANT METEORITE

A Russian exploring expedition under the leadership of N. T. Bobrovnikoff has proved the truth of stories concerning a giant meteorite which fell to earth in a lonely forest in the province of Yenessei, Siberia, June 30, 1908, reports Popular Science Monthly. Millions of great trees were mowed down when the crash occurred. A herd of fifteen thousand reindeer was completely wiped out. Two farmers in a village fifty miles away were knocked down by the blast and burned by the heat, and passengers in a railway train four hundred miles away felt the heat and shock. In proof of all this the Russian expedition found a devastated area twenty miles in diameter.

The Perfect Christmas

by Martha Banning Thomas

CHRISTMAS! What goes to make a perfect Christmas?

First, of course there must be a perfect Christmas eve. There should be green wreaths of holly in all the windows of all the homes everywhere; and candle light shining between them, and back of that the rosy, laughing faces of children. The window shades should be pulled high so that the joy within can be seen and heard even on the street.

THERE should be the silver chiming of bells from church steeples shaken out on the air by the wind. There should be stars—millions and millions of stars glittering in a dark blue sky.

THERE should be people of all ages and kinds singing carols—jolly carols, sweet carols, wistful carols, beautiful carols which once more create the magic spirit of the First Christmas eve.

THERE should be fragrant-smelling pines in every house; trees hung with garlands of popcorn, strings of red cranberries; green boughs weighed down with gifts for everyone, not forgetting Kitty, nor Hector, the pup.

THERE should be secrets, vast and numberless secrets whispered behind doors, in coal cellars, in closets and behind the barn after dark; secrets to be revealed on Christmas morning. Knitted mufflers for fathers [a few stitches dropped, but what of it?]. Pincushions for mothers [just a little bit lopsided, but very strong!] and a great many hand-made calendars, sewing bags and boxes for other members of the family.

AND then after Christmas eve comes Christmas day! Merry cousins and uncles and aunts arriving from all directions to share the dinner with the family. There should be a twinkling-eyed grandfather and a grandmother with a tremendous reputation for doughnuts.

THERE should be puddings, thousands upon thousands of puddings spread in steaming invitation on tables from one end of the country to the other. There should be turkey and roast goose and mince pies and raisins and fruit. And humble blessings said with bowed heads.

ALL these things go to make a perfect Christmas. But if we can have only a few of them, or even none of them, we can have a new peace in our hearts, and prayers that the children of the land may be loved and cared for even as the Christ Child was loved and cared for by His mother Mary, that night long, long ago when He lay in a manger in Bethlehem!

Fruit Eggs

Eggs all hitched together on a string like Christmas tree ornaments startled Clifton W. Mesurvey of Union, Maine, when he peered into one of his pullets' nests. There were three eggs joined together and collectively they were nearly five inches long. But the ambitious pullet, in laying her fruit eggs, overlooked something. Not one of them had a yolk.—Indianapolis News.

The courses were offered for the first time this fall, when the University of Wisconsin Extension Center moved into its new and completely equipped six-story building. The aim is to afford citizens the opportunity to acquire an education that will lead to emancipation from a "drifting-with-the-group" opinion, engender capacity for self-criticism, and give direction to cultural strivings.

The State University of Iowa, at Iowa City, has a school of religion, one of the objects of which is "to create an expectancy for men and women to choose religious callings as a vocation and to begin their preparation for such work."

What Is a "Fair" Price for Gas Service?

A business man from a neighboring city, successful because of his careful financial management, was asked: "What rate do you pay for gas?" Rates for gas had long been settled in his community. There had been no controversy.

He answered: "I can tell you approximately what my gas bills have amounted to recently but I do not know the rate."

The rate schedule is printed right on the face of his gas bill yet he did not know what he paid per thousand cubic feet. His was not an unusual case. When rates are settled few people give them any thought. They know what they are paying the gas company each month but not the unit rate. After all, this is the key factor in any problem of cost. What does it cost to do it with gas—Not how much per thousand cubic feet, but how much for the result desired?

Gas is no different from any other commodity or service in this respect. The fact that gas is supplied by a public utility and the public utility is subject to public regulation is the one consideration that keeps the question of value unsettled. It is the disposition, because of authority, to simply knock all price clear out of gas.

If it were a question of cooking, for instance, with coal or oil, the cost of doing the whole job of cooking would be weighed and considered as the basis of each fuel. The advantages and disadvantages would be taken into account and the fuel chosen that fits the necessities of the user.

Gas in the last analysis is in that same position regardless of rate. If oil cost is too high for the individual necessities of the user is its price reduced for that reason? Economic conditions influence the prices of other commodities. If gas rates are too high the Gas Company loses business to coal or oil. If the rates are too low, coal or oil lose business, but gas cannot advance as they can to equalize competitive conditions.

There is, of course, a service value in gas that is not possessed by its competitive fuels. This is a value recognized by the user but not given consideration by some rate authorities. This value is due to the labor saving in gas use because it requires no attention in firing or cleaning up after being used. It is conceded to be worth something—but is it paid for?

There is a very definite market value for gas as shown by Government reports. For example, the Bureau of Mines report for 1927 states that the average price paid for gas by consumers in Ohio during that year was 63 cents per thousand cubic feet. It states that the average price for natural gas for the entire nation that year was 58 cents, including the low prices of great flush production areas in the west.

City gate rates for Gas in Ohio—that is, the wholesale price of gas at city line and before distribution—averages higher than 45 cents.

Here in Columbus the city water costs the user at the rate of $1.20 per thousand cubic feet. The supply is within a few miles of the consumer and the water distribution lines parallel gas distribution lines. Gas must be brought several hundred miles and only 48 cents is allowed per thousand cubic feet.

If these considerations are fair, then is the gas rate in Columbus fair? If the local rate is fair, are all these economic facts unworthy?

The Gas Company serving you has made no profits under its present rate set-up. Is it fair to continue an unfair situation? Do you think the Gas Company unfair in asking for a higher rate obviously in line with these considerations?

Will you write your criticisms, comments or ideas on this subject? Address E. M. Tharp, Columbus Gas & Fuel Co.

A Christmas Story

By Robert Stead

From the hilltop where Clare stood she watched the sun sink slowly into his bed of snow. Her vantage point was the only elevation for many miles in all that prairie country. It commanded a view as far as eye could reach, broken only by the graves of box-elders and Russian poplars, now leafless and shrunken, which the settlers had planted about their steadings. Clare loved to climb it for the exhilaration, the vastness, the sense of infinity which it gave her.

At least, that was the explanation she offered when explanations were necessary. Her custom of walking to the top of the hill every evening before sunset could not escape observation and comment in a community where the doings of neighbors constituted the chief topic of conversation.

"Saw that Carson girl on the 'knob' again tonight," Bert McVain remarked at the supper table after his return from the market town where he had been delivering a load of wheat. "She's getting crazier every day."

"Too bad," Bert's mother commented, with a sigh. "She used to be so bright. It must be a great trial to Mrs. Carson.

And so the talk ran through the neighborhood. Clare Carson was "a little off." Echoes of that gossip did not fail to reach the Carson homestead, where Clare had been taken strictly to account for her wanderings.

"But, Mother," the girl protested, "so long as I don't neglect my work—and I don't—why shouldn't I walk up 'the knob' if I want to? The exercise and fresh air are good for me after all day in the house."

"Just the same, it don't look right," her mother argued. "People are beginning to talk."

"Let them," said Clare. And because he was twenty-two, and had a will of her own, the walks continued and the gossip grew.

"Oh, why can't they let me alone!" she exclaimed to herself, as she watched the sun dip into his bed of snow. "Fred, Fred! Do you know—can you understand—how I am keeping my promise?"

The red light, mingled with that bluish-white reflection which artists find in untrodden snow, touched her cheeks with its feathery brush, painting them with the glow of buoyant health. Under the tam which sheltered her pretty head her eyes shone with a sunset luster even while they plead for an answer from the infinite.

For six months she had kept her tryst; six months to a day, for was not this the twenty-fourth of December? On that June night half a year ago Fred had held her in his arms on this very spot while he told her of the urgency which took him East. The death of his father demanded his immediate return. "And Clare," he told her, "I know what their plans are. There is a match all made for me. It may be a coalition of the will; I don't know; but condition or no condition I'll be back for you as soon as I can put affairs in order. It was to escape her I came out here—and found you! Do you believe that I will come back to you, dearest?"

"Do You Believe That I Will Come Back to You?"

She assured him with her lips.

"I will have a fight of it dear," he went on, "and I will need your help. You don't know what it is to have all your people set against you. They think it's for the best, of course; Julia is a nice enough girl, and comes of an old and wealthy family, and they can't at length. "You will help, won't you?" understand my objection—"

"for now"

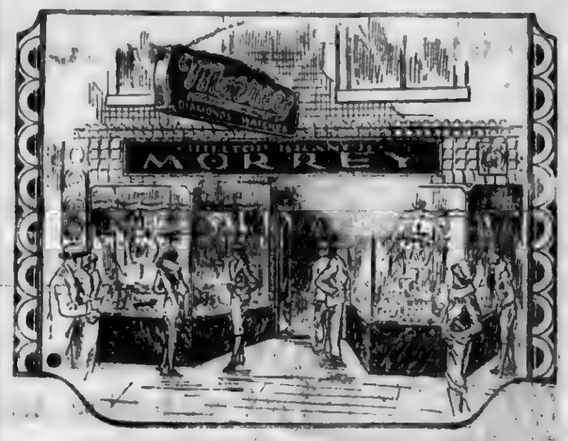
Interrupted, came to here again his present dilemma. "She is [illegible] ful; she would make you happy."

"That's just it—he wouldn't. Why should I marry a rich girl, when I have already enough for two? And as for beauty—is she who has seen you would call her beautiful?"

He held her again in that still June night as though he never would let her go.

"I will need your help," he repeated [illegible] ment. Then, "I'll tell you, Clare. I [illegible] soon as I [illegible] and [illegible] thoughts of help for me. I [illegible] endless, and only I will reach you one night. If a radio station can send its waves around the world can by your mind your mind can do much more!"

So she had promised, and for six months she had kept her promise, while the neighbors concluded that the Carson girl "was a bit off."



Suddenly her reverie was interrupted by the sound of sleigh bells on the road at the foot of the hill. A team and cutter were swinging sharply

Hilltop People Have Heard This Before, But Never With Greater Sincerity:

HILLTOP BRANCH, 2369 WEST BROAD STREET

"A Very Merry Christmas and a Happy, Prosperous New Year"

"YOU can believe me when I say that my Yuletide greetings to Hilltop men and women come from the innermost recesses of my heart.

"I'M IMMENSELY FOND of the Hilltop and its people, and I'm proud to be able, thru my branch jewelry store, to play a part in the daily life of this enterprising district.

"I'M PROUD, too, that I was the first downtown jeweler to bring virtually to the doorsteps of Hilltop homes all the facilities of a modern jewelry store—quality diamonds, watches, silverware and other jewelry, priced low because of immense purchasing power, and offered on most generous credit terms, namely, just a small down payment, and convenient weekly, semi-monthly, or monthly payments thereafter.

"HILLTOP PEOPLE have responded most generously to MORREY quality, MORREY values and MORREY service and terms, and my fullest expectations have been realized.

"I HEREWITH express my deep appreciation of this valued patronage, and pledge myself to even greater efforts in behalf of Hilltop people in nineteen hundred twenty-nine.

P.S. IN CASE, something has prevented you from doing your Christmas shopping, you still have time to remember everyone by visiting MORREY'S Hilltop branch and selecting gifts that last—jewelry. Our stocks still are complete, and there's a big variety of everything to choose from. And you can pay for your purchases conveniently in 1929.

Which Shall it Be, a Fur Coat...

An all-fur coat or a fur-red cloth coat? Which, oh, which shall it be? And Dame Fashion laughs at this dilemma of womankind, for well this mystic spirit whose willing subjects we are knows of the keen competition which she is staging between the two.

Never has the fur coat been so alluringly fashioned as it is in these ultra-modern days. The same may also be said of the cloth coat, so richly furred and in the styling of which amazing fabric manipulation plays such a fetching part. Which brings us back to the original problem of choosing between them.

If one is inclined toward a fur coat, the arguments in favor are many. First and foremost is the fact of the style element having entered into the realm of furs to an unprecedented extent. That is, the days of the all-look-alike fur coats are forever past. Today the fur coat is styled with every diversifying detail which bespeaks the . In this respect necessity has indeed whims and caprices of fashion. In this respect necessity has indeed become the "mother of invention" for furriers in order to meet the keen rivalry of the cloth coat, which has with the passing of the seasons become increasingly intriguing, have been impelled as never before to exercise all their ingenuity in working furs to a point of equal interest and versatility.

The smart thing about many of the new fur coats is that they have adopted a fabriclike styling. This is especially true of the fashionable thin supple furs which are handled like cloth. That is, they are made to tie in little bow effects at neck and wrists. Collars are especially smart and becoming, often handled in a "dressmaker way," also furs are seamed together as any material would be. Then, too, it adds to the zest of the game that there are so many heretofore unknown types now included in the furs we wear.

So fine processings are known cloth treatments. Not only are fabrics manipulated in artful seamings, inlays, tucking and such, but imagination is given full play when it comes to the positioning and designing of the luxurious fur trims.

Two rivals are posed side by side in the picture. Both the seal model to the left and the fur-trimmed black broadcloth to the right are conservative types such as appeal to the woman who dresses in quiet elegance. Canary-colored dyed ermine enlivens the handsome seal coat. As to the other model, it accents the smartness of black broadcloth for the winter wrap, also the vogue for the voluminous shawl collar.

LABOR MOST STRICTLY FORBIDDEN ON SABBATH

The Israelites developed the idea of the seventh day being one of rest; and in the time of Moses the laws on the subject were so strict that a man was put to death for gathering firewood on the Sabbath, and even the lighting of a fire was forbidden on that day under penalty of death. In the time of Christ the orthodox Jews kept the Sabbath not much less strictly; but Jesus very definitely opposed Himself to this observance and, according to the Gospel of St. John, actually risked His life in attempting to emancipate His followers from the bondage of the custom.

There must, indeed, have been a tremendously strong and clear tradition among early Christians that Jesus had freed them entirely from Sabbath observance, for in the Gospel He is reported as omitting the fourth commandment—"Keep holy the Sabbath day"—from His list of ordinances (Matt. 19, 18), while St. Paul also omits it (Rom. 13, 9) and attacks the Galatians for observing any special day as holy, his attitude being confirmed in the Epistle to the Colossians, where it is said that neither the Sabbath nor any other day should be observed as sacred.—London Weekly Graphic.

Things That Fail

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I thought that men must build success
On old successes. 'Tis not so.
For all the champions I know
Had been defeated more or less.

The smoother road that great men tread,
I learned, a harder path they came;
And he who found the eternal flame
Had left a thousand campfires dead.

Yea, many another dream must fade
That men may recognize the true;
And men will find the thing to do
Because of errors that they made.

We winnow life as hands the wheat;
Amid the chaff we find the grain.
I say that every loss has gain,
I say the bitter makes life sweet.

From rocks that loosen great men make
A footing that they know will hold;
Defeat will only make them bold
Some other height to dare, and take.

On rocks that tumble toward the vale
We upward climb to find the peak;
And men shall find the things they seek
By making use of things that fail.

THAT CARSON GIRL

southward through the gathering dusk. As she watched, the horses were reined in, the cutter stopped, one of the two occupants got out, and a man came running toward her. The next moment she was in his arms, breathless, laughing, almost too excited to speak.

"I knew I would find you here," he cried, "if only we made it on time!"

"But tell me, Fred, how does it come? Explain," she managed at length.

"I will—at the house," he answered. "Come!"

She hesitated, and a shadow swept her glowing face. "You know what my people think," she reminded him.

"I know what they thought," he laughed. "They thought that because

"But That's a Secret—Until After the Wedding!"

I was rich I could not be serious. But when they hear now I have lost all my money—"

"Lost your money?" she echoed.

"Does it make any difference, dear?"

"All the difference in the world," she cried exultantly. "Now I can marry you, and no one will say it is because you are rich! But what about her?"

"At the house," was all he would answer. He seized her arm, and together like children they rushed down the hill.

"It was like this," he explained, to the assembled Carson family after supper. "My father left me a million or so and a request that I should ask Julia France to be my wife. Uncles, aunts, cousins, my mother—everybody interpreted that request as a command. 'It was such a suitable match,' they said. Julia, it seemed, shared that opinion.

"I delayed my proposal until I could think it over, and one day, just at sunset, came a bright idea. Perhaps it started on Knob Hill." He glanced appreciatively at Clare, who blushed, but kept her counsel. "Then I rushed to my broker.

"'How long does it take to lose a million dollars on the stock market?' I asked.

"'Many people do it quicker than they expect,' he confided.

"'Well, lose a million dollars for me as soon as you can. There is no time to spare.' I told him my reason and, like a good sport, he promised to do his best.

"I bought a comfortable life annuity for my mother, but everything else went into the mill. Cash, bonds, stocks, securities, deeds—they poured into that broker's office like sheaves into your separator, Mr. Carson, and all the time they kept clamoring for more. At last I was sold out. They even threatened bankruptcy proceedings. It was quite a scandal, I assure you. Then I proposed to Julia, just as my father said, and was turned down cold. So here I am, offering to make you a Christmas present of a brand new son-in-law."

Mr. Carson sucked at his pipe. "Well," he remarked at length, "any fellow that's fool enough to lose a million dollars for a girl deserves what he gets. Take her!"

"Oh won't Bert McVrain be mad!" shouted Clare's young brother Rob. "He always wanted Clare himself!"

Later, when the Carson family had obligingly retired, Fred held Clare's head close to his own. "The joke of it is," he whispered, "I didn't lose a million dollars. I made a million and a half. "But that's a secret—until after the wedding!"

UNIVERSITY BUILDS FIRE-PROOF LIBRARY

A fire-proof library will be added to the buildings of the University of North Carolina, at Chapel Hill, North Carolina. There will be housed "love letters, diaries, reminiscences, plantation records, files of newspapers, or any other printed matter that reflects the social, industrial, and political history of the South." According to Dr. Joseph Gregoire de Roulhac Hamilton, professor of history at Chapel Hill, Southerners have been careless of their old documents. The University has already a collection of forty thousand bound volumes and pamphlets. The plan is to add to the number, so that the collection "will include, so far as possible today, every book or pamphlet of every kind on any subject written in the South or by a Southerner." Any material that throws light on the life and thought of the South will be a welcome addition.

Professor Schaeffer, of the University of Kansas, has found by experimenting that blindfolded people tend to walk in circles—"narrowing spirals, like a clock spring," says Popular Science Monthly—and that fish behave in the same way. Some people go to the left, others to the right. Psychologists are trying to find a reason for this natural bent.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"HULLABALOO"

This term, meaning a great deal of noise, a sort of bedlam of sound created usually by many voices, is a good example of the wealth of color and history that is concealed in some of our commonest words.

"Hullabaloo" comes to us from the Coranach, the funeral dirge formerly in use among the Irish and Scottish Celts. This consisted of several verses detailing the life of the deceased and proclaiming in loud and mournful accents the loss of those left behind.

The cries were called by the Irish "Hulagubue" and "hululu," and it is from the latter that we have the still popular "hullabaloo."

The Coranach has long ago fallen into disuse. It was superseded until the latter half of the Eighteenth century, when this also began to wane, by the bagpipe funeral lament of the Highlanders. In Scotch literature however, and in references to Scotland in English literature we find many refrences to the older custom of the Coranach, which gave us the word "hullabaloo."

Day-After Scenes Are Numerous And Curiously Enacted on Hilltop

If you think there isn't much to do after Christmas you are mistaken. On Wednesday following St. Nick's visit the following scenes were reproduced on the Hilltop.

One of our Scotch neighbors was seen trying to sell discarded Christmas trees and one of our Jewish friends took him up because of his bargains.

Speaking of bargains recalls the fact that Hilltop stores will have their winter clearance sales during these next few weeks, thus giving a few industrious and thoughtful souls an opportunity to do their next year's Christmas shopping early.

Doctors report several cases of "stuffitis" from partaking too heavily of the turkey to avoid an avalanche of hash the next day. Dentists shared the limelight by capping several broken molars after the annual hard-candy festival.

A local citizen was seen licking the postage stamp on a greeting card to a friend and later engaged in an argument with the postmistress because he couldn't get it dated back a few days.

Postmen were expected to be able to settle down for a rest of their tired arches and bunions by the last of this week.

The man who made such a kick about the over-supply of handkerchiefs he was expecting was seen buying one in a Hilltop store Wednesday.

Hilltop stores were crowded Wednesday morning with those desiring to exchange gifts. Odd sizes and colors were being shoved across counters in every business house.

The menu in restaurants and homes was headed by hash. This may last a few days yet.

Several thousand sighs on the car to be given away by the Hilltop Business Men's Association were deposited Wednesday as the result of last minute buying Monday night.

SPECIAL MEETING OF CITY COUNCIL

Special meeting of city council to consider the $6,000,000 sewer relief bond issue will be held at 4 p. m. Thursday instead of 7 p. m., it was decided Monday by President Weber. Many of the councilmen protested they had made previous arrangements and the new time was set to accommodate them.

Mayor Thomas has recommended they only $1,000,000 be appropriated by council for 1929, leaving the rest to be voted on at a later date.

Appropriations of council will be in accord with an order from the state health department that pollution should be relieved in the Scioto and Olentangy rivers and Alum creek.

The city engineering division has arranged its program so that work may begin as soon as the appropriated funds are sold.

Holiday Weddings

The usual Christmas rush for marriage licenses was evidenced Monday at the Franklin county courthouse, when two deputies were kept busy all day issuing licenses to 55 couples who had planned their weddings during the holidays.

Use Root for Food

The wider use of arrowroot as a food is urged by the Department of Commerce. Many people believe that arrowroot is suitable only for medical purposes. But it is a valuable foodstuff, excellent for use in custards, blancmange, gravies, soups, and pastries. It is said to be "infinitely preferable to cheap foreign starch made from potatoes." At present arrowroot is produced on a commercial scale only in the British island of St. Vincent in the West Indies. In Bermuda, where arrowroot was formerly produced, industry has practically died out, half an acre being under cultivation at the present time. PRIDE AND PENITENCE

It was evening of a summer night in June. Mary Hunter stood before the mirror of an old dresser which she had recently enameled to match the color of the new drapes which now hung at the windows of her bedroom. With the assistance of her mother, the girl had transformed the room into what she considered an earthly paradise. Many little novel devices took from the room the mark that poverty had once left there.

Mary stood for a few minutes before the mirror, while she ran a comb through her short auburn hair, powdered her impudent looking nose, and blinked her bright blue eyes merrily. Then the sound of someone whistling a familiar tune reached her ears. She seemed to hear the words:

"When I looked at you, I knew you loved me too.
Let's be school day sweethearts now."

She ran hastily from the room, and soon found both of her hands clasped by those of Paul Randall, whose visits to the Hunter home had been very frequent of late. They sat down side by side on the porch steps, where Paul began to discuss present and past. Then, having something on his mind pertaining to the future, he requested Mary to take a walk with him.

Down the old familiar path, followed by the stares they wandered hand in hand, just as they had done children on their way to school. ...covered a distance of a mile ...what ...ing the ... school ... they ... many shouted ... the gate "He always ... ...n their

Quite the reverse. Your eyes are shining like stars. No, you don't look the least bit sorry to me." He paused for a moment, and then continued. "I wonder what you'd do if I should kiss you now."

Mary was standing with her back leaning against the tree, and Paul was standing before her.

"Why don't you try it, and find out?" she asked mischievously.

"My darling!" the youth exclaimed, and closing his eyes in blissful anticipation, he leaned forward and pressed his lips violently against the trunk of the oak tree. Mary had thrown her head to one side quickly, which left nothing between Paul's lips and the tree trunk. Mary gave forth a hearty shout of laughter at his expense, but was immediately caught in his arms and held tight. His lips met hers again and again in rapturous delight. Minutes became seconds.

"Someday, we'll be married, sweetheart," he said, low and thrillingly. "As soon as I can live independently."

Something in his words brought Mary back to the realities of life.

"Oh, Paul, darling, you mustn't allow me to interfere with your future. I was so happy I forgot that you are an heir to wealth, while I am just a nobody."

"Not a nobody, dear. You are the only girl I have ever cared for. Why should we allow such a little thing as money to interfere with our love, a love born in childhood and strengthened in young manhood and womanhood. You are mine, dear, mine! Always! No matter what happens. Remember that."

"All right, Paul, I'm too obstinate to allow anyone to take you from me, members of your family or anyone else. I wonder what Kathryn will think," she mused.

"Can you keep a secret, Mary?"

"I'll try. Let me hear it."

"I think Kathy loves Frank Ormsby, but she won't admit it. Said something once about having a head instead of a heart."

"Too bad to be cheated out of both," was Mary's mental conjecture.

CHAPTER III

"I suppose you have been disgracing your family again," Kathryn Randall said to her brother one evening after he had returned from one of his frequent visits to the old neighborhood, where, as children, he and Kathryn had spent many happy days.

"How so, sis?" Paul said good naturedly.

"I cannot understand why you have severed your friendship with the Hunter family. I call to see the attraction."

"Well, Kathryn, I may as well tell you now as later. Mary and I expect to be married sometime, and I wish you would be a good sport and begin to treat her with the respect which I demand that my wife shall have. You have an influence over the other girls of your set, and if you will accept her friendship, I am certain that the others will follow your example."

"Do you really think so?"

"Yes," said Paul, a little discouraged. "Why don't you and mother call on Mary, and assure her that she will be a welcome addition to our family. Remember," he added threateningly, "I intend to marry her whether or no, so you had better decide to accept the situation peaceably."

Kathryn finally complied with his request, and even went to the extent of offering to give a party in the girl's honor.

"Just give an ordinary party and invite her. Remember, I do not want our engagement announced, as we intend to wait several years before being married," Paul cautioned.

The following day, the proud young lady condescended to pay a visit to the section of the town which she had once been compelled to call home. She chose to enter this district from a roundabout way, and before reaching the Hunter home, passed the house where Frank Ormsby lived. He was trimming the hedge fence in the front yard when Kathryn passed, and in bewilderment, he dropped his shears to the ground, while he tried to convince himself that he was not dreaming. The girl occupying the rear seat of the large car at first looked wistfully at the boy clad in blue overalls. His brown eyes met hers and she saw an expression on his face similar to the one she had noticed on her brother's when he was speaking to Mary. Then pride overruled her innermost feelings, and she merely nodded coldly toward the youth, who had dared to hope that the much sought after Kathryn Randall could even be a friend to him.

Kathryn made her call as brief as possible, and Mary half-reluctantly accepted the other girl's offer of friendship as she felt that the tones of Kathryn's voice carried a false note.

Several days later Mary received an invitation to a party at the Randall home, which she construed that Paul's sister, only.

"Mother," she said, one evening after Paul had bidden her good night, "I am invited to Kathryn's party and I haven't a thing to wear. What shall I do?"

Tears filled the mother's eyes, as she well knew that her funds were very low and that she could not afford to buy a dress that would be suitable for the occasion. However, she managed to force a smile.

Youth Is Killed As Train Hits Car

Pennsylvania Flyer Demolishes Auto on North Hague Avenue Crossing.

Lawrence K. Griffith, 20, Hilliards, was killed instantly Tuesday night when the sedan he was driving was struck by an eastbound Pennsylvania flyer at the North Hague avenue crossing.

He was enroute from his home to that of his fiancee, Miss Violet Reffel, on South Park avenue. He lived with his uncle, Arlie Raney, Hilliards.

The car was demolished. Griffith died of a crushed skull.

Conductor B. Crowder, 178 Oakland Park Ave., stated that the car was struck by the engine of the first section of the train, which was five hours overdue.

He was employed by Marble Cliff Quarries Co. Surviving him are his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harley Griffith, Somerset, and four brothers and two sisters.

Hudson-Essex New Lines Out

Bill Orman Co. Displaying New Models in West Side Show Rooms.

The Bill Orman Co., 1929 W. Broad St., announces new Hudson and Essex models for 1929. Twenty-one models are included in the combined lines of cars, 10 more than during the last year. The Hudson is now presented on two increased wheelbases of 122 inches and 130 inches, while the Essex wheelbase remains unchanged.

It is stated that the Hudson company, now celebrating its twentieth year, will build nearly as many cars in the first half of 1929 as in all of 1928, which has been the biggest year the company has ever run. For the last month the factories have been operating on day and night shifts to provide dealers the country over with cars, deliveries of which are to start at once.

Two new body types added to the Essex line are a town sedan and a convertible coupe.

Changes in the new models are said to make the Essex a 70 mile-an-hour car and the Hudson more than an 80-mile-an-hour car. To both lines, extra equipment has been added. The Essex now carries four hydraulic shock absorbers.

In the Essex the power increase is computed at 25 per cent while the Hudson power has been stepped up 14 per cent. Brake horsepower developed in the Essex engine is given as 55, with 92 horsepower for the Hudson.

1380 Registered At Local Library

December Circulation of 6297 Falls Slightly Below November Figure.

A total of 1380 have registered at the Hilltop Library according to the report of Faith M. Wolfe, local librarian. She states that 179 new registrations were received during December, 70 of which were adults.

"Despite the fact that a great number of cards have been turned in temporarily because the owners were busy with Christmas shopping and other holiday duties, the December circulation fell behind by a small margin. The November circulation was 6462 and that of December 6297," Miss Wolfe stated.

"These figures are extremely satisfying since a definite decrease had been expected. Past records invariably show Santa Claus and the library to be close competitors for the children's free time.

"We shall be very glad to have all the boys and girls come back for books now that the busy season is over. The large number of new books has greatly restocked the shelves and children will find a wealth of wonderful books from which to select.

"The enthusiasm and appreciation shown by children and adults give promise of a greater patronage during the new year. This will make it possible for the library to render a greater service, which is every library's greatest ideal," she continued.

"Vertical Banks", "Wing Overs" Great Sport in Air Over Hilltop

"Great stuff," was the only exclamation from the Record reporter after a "flip-the-flip trip" in the air over the Hilltop, Monday afternoon with chief pilot Walter Seyerle at Columbus Airport.

Working upon the basis that only experience can convince a person, Seyerle offered to demonstrate with the above trip. So, editorially speaking, "we" took caution to see that our belt was well strapped and in short order the plane was throwing cinders behind and soon left the ground.

Higher, higher she climbed and the individual corn stalks in the field below were not discernable after a few seconds. The houses began to look like garages and the well arranged lay out of the Hilltop was soon appreciated.

Eight hundred feet in the air, we flew over the Record office and other buildings on Broad street. Traffic looked familiar from this point but with a few upward moves the cars began to look like mice below. The Hillcrest church building and the Hilltop Bank are the most outstanding from the air.

"Got your belt on tight?" This from Seyerle. An affirmative answer was his signal to give us a thrill we had never experienced before and so the plane headed skyward while all the weight of our body seemed to lunge to our head. Then another such action after settling down again, but this time our confidence began to take hold and the "vertical bank" was more enjoyable.

Then came the "wing over" which seemed more like a sudden drop from nowhere to no place of importance, but without it the trip would be incomplete. A few more vertical banks and we settled down to earth after a long swing to the north.

To those who have never been off the ground or its attachments, this trip would seem a little uncertain at first but all confidence is soon restored after watching the ease with which Seyerle makes his plane take the desired course.

Four students at the new flying school were ready to take solos this week. The new chief pilot did not name them because he said they did better when they were unaware of how near they were ready to take the much looked forward to flight.

Seyerle is now a resident of the Hilltop, living at 3058 W. Broad St. He learned to fly seven years ago at Marietta and has never been scratched in flying.

Nephew Killed

Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Hastings, 86 S. Ogden Ave., left Monday morning for Kenosha, Wis., to attend the funeral services of Richard Hastings, 17, nephew of Mr. Hastings and son of Dr. J. F. Hastings of Kenosha. The youth was one of five killed when a passenger train struck the two cars in which they were riding Sunday. All were members of prominent families in that city.

Library Funds Up

A request that not less than $50,000 be appropriated for branch libraries next year, including an allowance for a new branch in the Milo district, was made to Council Wednesday night in a petition by the Glen Echo Child Welfare League containing 30 signatures.

To Clean River

On the advice of Mayor Thomas, council authorized the sale of $3,000,000 in bonds to finance one-third of the city's share in clearing pollution of the Scioto and Olentangy rivers and Alum Creek at a special session of the body Thursday afternoon. The remaining $2,000,000 will be issued at a later date.

Hoge Men's Club Holds Second Meet of Season

Hoge Men's Club of Hoge Memorial church met at the church for their second meeting of the season Friday evening. Speakers included County Prosecutor King and Rev. P. B. Gay. Music was in charge of Chester White and Mr Hiatt.

Officers, directors and team captains of the club will meet at the church Monday evening, Jan. 7, at 8 o'clock.

Asks Forgiveness For Dime She Took Twelve Years Ago

A missing dime of 12 years ago was subject for discussion at a local store last week.

The following letter received recently by Fred Raether of the Economy Variety store speaks for itself. It was mailed from Nashville, Tenn.

"Dear Sir:

"When I was a very small child, my mother sent me to your store to buy something. At the time our home was in Columbus. My parents being devoted Christians I knew the day I should go but temptation seized me when I saw laying on the counter, a dime.

"That day I took the first and last bit of money I ever touched, which did not belong to me outside my own home. With it I bought some candy and forgot it. But since then I have grown and been gloriously saved by my Jesus and tonight I cannot rest until I tell you of it and ask your forgiveness."

The name of the writer is withheld but was signed to the letter with a request that Mr. Raether answer. The dime, however, was not enclosed.

Interest Grows In Gift of Ford

New Year Promises Favorable Business Is Outlook of Hilltop Merchants.

Tickets of the Hilltop Business Men's Association given away with purchases and payments on accounts serve to show that Hilltop merchants are starting the new year with favorable business. Interest in the gift of the new Ford Tudor sedan to someone on the Hilltop continues to grow as February 1 draws nearer.

The number of tickets given during the past weeks will almost equal that of the full time during the picnic advertising campaign in August. Merchants express themselves as being well pleased with the business outlook for the coming year. January, ordinarily a light business period promises to be better this year than a year ago.

No further plans have been made for the presentation of the car February 1 but will probably be arranged for at the next meeting of the association.

Most of the merchants participating in the advertising campaign have boxes in which the stubs may be placed. Four main collection boxes are stationed at the Hilltop Bank, Palmer's Grocery, Whitethorne and Sullivant, Campbell's Pharmacy, Hague and Broad and Neuenschwander's Grocery, 2221 W. Broad St.

Announcements concerning the presentation of the car will probably be made in next week's Record following the meeting of the business men's association.

Oddities of 1928 Are Revealed By Record Files for Past Year

Oddities are the spice of life around a newspaper office and at this time we review the peculiar happenings of the Hilltop during the past year as shown by the Record files.

First prize of the year and one of the first was that of the woman who got a new refrigerator by sprinkling coal soot on her husband's coffee cream.

Several months ago a man lost his slipper chasing a burglar and also lost the burglar.

The fish story of A. C. Trainc gets the cream . . . 22 fish on the coldest day of winter.

Then there was the story of the Aviatrix club composed of girls who held their meetings in the attic to make them more real.

The first straw hat was seen May 10. And about the same time a man caught a burglar and made him pay for the screen window he had torn.

The bad luck of the year is recorded by George Goulding who fell down stairs on Friday, the 13th of July.

Geraldine Roof may well remember the criticism of her organ recital by the bug-house editor.

A certain colored fellow on the Hilltop who lost $64 demonstrating his banking knowledge to strangers will be on the lookout for them this year.

Honesty was personified when a woman returned two bits to a local policeman after waiting two years.

Real success was seen in the hole in one shot at golf by Dr. T. S. Fox.

Boys of West High lost in the race for scholarship by allowing 64 more girls on the honor roll.

Three men flying from the local airport took on the appearance of world heroes when they were mistaken for Lindbergh at Cleveland.

The pathetic story of the year was that of the flowers of a sixtieth wedding anniversary that were used at the funeral of the husband.

Real genius was shown by the West students who invented scientific success in order to be sent home from classes.

A large box is displayed in the window with labels from the Pontiac manufacturers to the local company. It is also labeled "Do not open until advised by Pontiac Co."

Struck by Car

Scouts Practice At B. M. Gun Club

Troop 45 Leaders Explain Rules For Marksmanship Merit Badges.

Hilltop Boy Scouts are indebted to the Columbus Business Men's Gun Club through their secretary, E. M. Littleton, for making it possible for them to become familiar with the use of rifles, safety devices, etc., and to become efficient in marksmanship, A. W. Elliott, scoutmaster of Troop 45, in conference with troop committeemen, told a Record reporter, Wednesday.

"The boys from Hilltop troops have passed most of their marksmanship merit badge tests at the club range located in the basement of the Columbus Hotel. As a usual thing boys are interested in the use of firearms. Parents are always anxious for the younger boys because of the hazards which result in the careless use of such weapons," Elliott said.

"Unless a boy's dad is a nimrod and makes intelligent effort to teach his son how to take care of a gun and put it to its intended use, the boy is like to drift into habits of carelessness and even recklessness," he continued.

Modern wild-west movies are held up for a bit of needed criticism because of their suggestiveness to the adolescent mind, which has a normal amount of call of the wild instinct in him, which has never been satisfied through proper training or educated into some other channel, the committeemen pointed out.

Recently a Hilltop boy who is a member of a Boy Scout troop had a very serious accident by disobeying one of the most important rules in the marksmanship merit badge test, the committee stated.

Through this code the boys are required to learn the following rules:

I hereby promise upon my honor never

Pride and Penitence

By MARCELLA R. CARLETON

"There is always a way, daughter," she said at length, "but me see. Ah, I have it. You remember that silk dress which I keep in the trunk. There is enough material in it for two of the dresses the girls wear nowadays. Just you run uptown to the drygoods store and bring me a fashion pamphlet, and you'll see what a good woman can make from nothing."

"You're a dear, mother, and I'll help you," Mary said joyfully, as she kissed the care-worn, patient face, and then hurried to make the proposed errand.

After a great deal of worrying and scheming, Mrs. Hunter, with the help of her daughter, completed the dress, which was by far the prettiest one the girl had ever possessed. But no one, not even Mary, knew the pain that the mother felt as she took the last article that reminded her of a happy past and proceeded to fashion it according to the present mode.

The night of the party arrived, and when Paul came to escort Mary to his house, a lovely vision stood before him. In his eyes, Mary was the very embodiment of perfection, but unfortunately, the majority of the guests whom Kathryn had invited were not so charitable in their opinions. One in particular, whom Paul had requested his sister to omit from the list who were to receive invitations, was there at the request of Kathryn, who had secretly disregarded her brother's advice. Gertrude Matthews had come prepared to be as snobbish as possible toward the girl whom she recognized as a serious rival, as Kathryn had hinted that an engagement existed between Paul and Mary.

When the couple finally arrived Kathryn said to Mary:

"So glad to see you, my dear. Come with me, and I will introduce you to the others. Paul, you go down to the kitchen and mix up some highballs. You'll find Wayne and Burt in the living room, if you want assistance."

Mary, encouraged by Kathryn's cordial manner, had banished a portion of her nervousness before reaching the room where the others had gathered. When she found herself face to face with them, however, she lost some of her self-assurance, as most of the girls plainly indicated that they had no desire to accept her as one of their "circle."

Frequent lifting of the eyebrows, deliberate slights, and general haughty behavior convinced Mary that she had made a mistake in coming. Kathryn, who had at first been cordial enough, now assumed the manner of the others, and Mary longed for Paul to make his appearance.

He had no sooner entered the room, however, when Gertrude Matthews took his arm and demanded to see certain books which the Randall library contained. Mary, a feeling of jealousy creeping over her, resolved to have revenge on Miss Matthews, also on Kathryn, whom she felt was responsible for existing conditions. Somehow, Mary managed to control the feelings of anger and resentment which grew stronger with every passing moment while Gertrude Matthews successfully monopolized Paul's time. Before the evening was over, however, he managed to rid himself of the girl's objectionable society, without being extremely rude. Then he went in search of Mary. As soon as he entered the room, Mary noticed a change in the general behavior of her new acquaintances.

Flattering speeches and courteous remarks took the place of sneers and snobbishness. Later in the evening when the dancing began, she noticed several suggestive signals which certain girls passed to their brothers, wishing them to ignore the girl from "across the tracks." Few of the young men heeded such requests, however, and the evening, after all, was not a total loss to Mary.

Despite the efforts of Kathryn and her friends to conceal their animosity toward Mary, from Paul, that young man, being more observant than they gave him credit for, was on the verge several times of giving Kathryn a piece of his mind, and of ordering the others to leave the premises. Good breeding, however, caused him to refrain from such an act.

The few hours which she spent that evening in the Randall home seemed like days of imprisonment to Mary. She tried to overcome a feeling of dislike which she felt for Paul's sister, but the letter which she received the following day from that young lady absolutely destroyed the last shreds of a friendly regard.

"You probably realize by this time that you do not belong in our class," it began. "It is to be regretted that my brother has shown you so much attention, but of course, you must understand that a boy is not necessarily considering marriage when he condescends to be friendly with one of your class. Rich men have been known to make love to poor girls for different purposes."

Similar sentences completed the letter, which Mary, a little scheme gradually forming in her mind, resolved to keep for future use, though she had no intention of showing it to Paul.

"He must have enough trouble on his mind, being in that family, without me causing him additional worry," she thought.

Kathryn's insulting note came in the morning, but the afternoon mail brought a different kind of letter, one which was destined to change the world for Mary.

Miss Adela Spencer, a maiden sister to Mrs. Hunter, had inherited the property belonging to Mary's grandfather, as he disapproved the marriage of his youngest daughter to Samuel Hunter; and though he was far from being a wealthy gentleman, the economical tendencies and efficient business management of Miss Adela united in gradually increasing her bank account to quite a large sum.

Although she shared her father's opinion of her sister's choice of a husband, she had a certain affection for Mary, and after carefully considering the matter, decided to offer Mary a home in the city with her for a few years, in which time the young girl was to receive a better education. Mary and her mother read and re-read the communication with delight. Then, after a moment's thought, Mary's face became very grave. The opportunity of fulfilling her most cherished dreams was within her grasp, but she must consider the sacrifice. Years of work and study, meant years of separation from those she loved most—her mother and Paul Randall. Which should she choose? Unconsciously, her hand went to her apron pocket where she had placed the letter which had caused her to shed so many bitter tears of resentment that morning. A strong desire to be in position to snub Kathryn Randall and the other girls whom she had met the previous evening, almost equalled the feeling of love she bore for her mother and her sweetheart.

That evening, the letter from Miss Adela was presented to Paul for his opinion. After considering the matter carefully, he said:

"It will be hard for us, Mary, dear; but I think that you should take advantage of this opportunity. Before we can be married, I will have to make a start for myself in some line or other. In the meantime, you can take what girlhood owes you—an education and a glimpse of the brighter things of life."

It cost Paul a greater effort to utter these words of advice than his even tone indicated.

"It will be necessary for me to go away for several months, possibly a year or more," he continued, "so you see we could not be together as often as we have been recently, anyway."

After a little more conversation on the subject, it was decided that Mary should leave for the city the following week, and a letter to that effect was accordingly mailed to Mary's aunt.

CHAPTER II

Although it was very early in the morning, Miss Spencer, Mary's maiden aunt and kind benefactress, was energetically making preparations for the arrival of her niece, whom she expected that day on the noon train. Every room in the house was cleaned thoroughly and everything put to right in anticipation of the arrival of the expected guest. After reviewing the results of her labor, Miss Adela hastened to the kitchen where Nancy, a young girl belonging to the black race, was preparing an appetizing meal for the niece of her mistress.

As the hands of the clock moved [illegible] the hour of twelve, the girl began to work faster, completing the work allotted to her in an incredibly short space of time.

"Yo' looks lak yoose all dun tired out, missus," she said, as her eyes fell on Miss Spencer. "But what fo' I'd lak ter know is de use of bein' so perticler 'bout things jest for Miss Mary's sake. She'll be havin' company every evenin', and young gemmens is mighty careless 'bout disappearances of people's homes. The place'll look lak one of dem 'ar tornadoes had hit it, in a week from now, or mah face is white, stid o' black."

"Now, now, Nancy, you must not talk so regarding my niece. I think you are mistaken about the young gentlemen, too, because I intend to limit her acquaintances as much as possible."

Thus, partly assured, Nancy resumed her work, and Miss Spencer was soon on her way to the depot in the car driven by her chauffeur. When they arrived at the station, it lacked ten minutes of being train time. While she was waiting for the time to pass, Miss Adela sat quietly in the waiting room, thinking about the task, as she considered it, before her. Would Mary conduct herself like a true descendant of the old Spencer family, or had she inherited some of her father's traits of character? To Miss Adela, the very name of Hunter was repulsive.

"Her name shouldn't worry me, though," Miss Spencer decided at last. "She will probably marry some day, and her name will be changed. My greatest worry is that she may strongly resemble her father in other ways."

The whistle of an approaching train interrupted her thoughts. She arose from her seat and was soon scanning the passengers who alighted from the train, trying to find her niece, whom she had never seen before. Presently, she found herself gazing into a pair of bright blue eyes.

"Are you my aunt, Miss Adela Spencer?" the girl questioned.

"That I am, my dear," the older woman responded. She surveyed the girl from head to foot, and was well pleased. Too bad, she thought, that the girl had inherited her father's blue eyes instead of her mother's brown ones, but since the likeness could not be helped, she resolved to ignore it.

Many of the dwellings facing the boulevard far surpassed the one owned by Paul Randall's father in Centerville. Presently, they passed a large school building which was pointed out to Mary as the Eastwood High school.

"That is the place where you will spend four years, Mary," her aunt remarked. Mary made no reply, but smiled wisely to herself, as she had no intention of allowing four years to pass before completing her High school work.

When they arrived at Miss Spencer's home, Mary was conducted to her room. It was elaborately furnished, compared with the room she had occupied at home, which, though tastefully decorated, could not compare with this one. The draperies were of the best quality, while those she was accustomed to seeing had been made from the cheapest quality of cretonne. The furniture and the rug covering the floor had been chosen with excellent taste, the cost being scarcely considered. But, in spite of these new luxuries, Mary felt that first night, that she would gladly exchange them for the lowly bedroom at home, and the smile on her mother's face.

The following morning, she attempted to overcome her homesickness by making the acquaintance of the only short drive in the city and a matinee, which she attended, accompanied by her aunt, constituted her enjoyment for that day. That evening, Miss Spencer summoned the girl to her own room.

"I wonder if she intends to give me a lecture," Mary thought, as she tripped up the stairs. "Mother said she would probably be very strict with me."

"What is it, Aunt Addie?" she asked upon entering Miss Spencer's room.

"I just want to explain the rules of my household to you, as I think it best that you become accustomed to them at once, before you form any bad habits."

"Yes, auntie."

"In the first place, I do not want you to be too familiar with the servants. I saw Tom looking at you today in a way that I did not like. I want you to become a woman of refinement and culture, so that some day you may marry a man of high standing, and retrieve the honor your mother forfeited when she married Mr. Hunter."

"Please, auntie,—" Mary began, as she cherished a tender memory of the man to whom Miss Spencer was now referring.

"Don't interrupt me, Mary. As I was saying: I want you to attain an enviable social position, preferably by marriage, as that is a solid footing. This, of course, is a matter of the future, but I am warning you against foolish school girl infatuations."

"Did you ever experience such a thing, aunty," Mary asked, because she could not possibly help it.

Miss Spencer was thoroughly shocked at her niece's impudence.

"Why, Mary"

"Pardon me, Aunt Addie. I just wondered."

"Another thing, I want you to give your undivided time to your studies during your freshman year. You may have girl friends but must not even think of beaux for some time yet. I do not want you to become interested in any of the boys in your classes at school. Will you promise me this, Mary?"

The girl laughed inwardly. How easy to make and keep that promise! How could she possibly become interested in the boys at school, when her thoughts in that line were always concentrated upon Paul Randall? Miss Spencer, not knowing of the understanding that existed, had only mentioned school chums. Mary knew that even Paul would be beneath her aunt's notice, as Mr. Randall had made the foundation of his fortune by hard labor, and though he was now one of the most wealthy men in Centerville, he had no family tree of which to boast.

The following day, Mary entered High school. She felt a little discouraged at first, as she found that her knowledge of certain subjects did not equal that of most of her classmates. In some branches, however, she was superior to them, as her time there she had completed the course in the public schools of Centerville, and not been spent in vain.

After a series of mistakes, such as entering the building by the wrong entrances, and finding herself in the wrong class rooms, due to the purposely misguided directions of certain upper-class pupils. At the close of the second period, she attempted to descend the stairs leading from the third to the second floors of the building, but her progress was hindered by a group of students whom she met on the steps.

"Wrong stairs, freshie!" they called. "Slide down the banisters!" one suggested. Which Mary, promptly did almost coming in abrupt contact with a long nosed, spectacled professor, who

WHAT DOES THE NEW YEAR HOLD?

As the first few days of the new year pass and we become accustomed to writing 1929 we have had opportunities to look forward to bright things for the year.

Resolutions that are so familiar with many of us may have been broken by now and those who do not believe in such are none the better off. With them or without them the new year can be made better.

Basis for this belief is vested in the fact that we have another year of experience to serve as a guide post for the coming year. Where we have made mistakes in the last year we should avoid them during the next twelve months. On the other hand there will be many more chances for mistakes as we take on new ventures in 1929.

However the new year will hold just what we put into it. Progress should be the slogan in all endeavors as has been in the past.

OTHER THAN PECUNIARY WEALTH

Money makes the mare go, we have heard it said but at the same time we can lead the old horse to water but we can't make her drink.

In a like manner money is handy in every respect but it is not the only kind of wealth that should interest individuals. Money gained without service to someone is soon forgotten and is of little use. Real benefits can be derived from money that has been made by giving others comforts or better living conditions.

The man of wealth in a community is looked to for aid in charity work and it is only fitting that he should contribute. In this way his money is serving a greater number and thus insuring a good feeling to himself.

About the most disfavored person in our eyes is that one who teaches his children to look upon the religion of others as being entirely out of place and wrong.

There may be a gas station on every corner but it hasn't reached the point where it is fun to run out of gas.

The Spectator

There are too many chances for a man to become a lawbreaker.

An Economic Picture

While seated around the home fire in the evening recently Red Pullis ventured upon a question for discussion that applies very well to most any community.

"Here it is a few days from the holidays and all the folks of the community will be buying Christmas gifts. Now I wonder how many are going to buy them here or will they go to some other business section where they think they may do better.

"The favorite expression of the merchant who holds on to old-time ideas is that the resident should patronize their home stores and the local man because he contributes to the community life.

"This is all very well said but not always so easily done. It is true that the merchants do their large part in the community but a sounder basis of argument lies in the fact that they furnish merchandise of like quality at equal if not less prices than can be found in larger shopping areas.

"The ideal economic picture is that of the buyer getting more for less."

Why Pay More?

The question is presented, why pay more? If it is true that goods may be purchased for less at some other merchant's place of business it is not good judgment on the part of the buyer to buy at the higher place.

Another phase to be considered is that the old ways of doing business have been discarded and in this changing world the survival of the fittest applies as much or more to business as to individuals. If a store is not rendering service or considers itself too independent to go out of the way for a small favor it is time that a better one replace it as a service to the community.

Should We Be Alarmed?

Is there a need for alarm on the part of the local business man if a store of another section establishes a business house a few doors away?

The answer is plain. It is a thing he should encourage rather than discourage. More stores in the community gives the residents a wider range of selection, one of the very things that ordinarily takes them away to the large shopping areas.

Furthermore another like business house affords competition and opens up the eyes of the public. The original merchants are now given new ideas in selling that are pleasant to both merchant and buyer.

Auto Accidents Increase

A common thing in traveling any distance by automobile is to see several cars wrecked in some manner. Careless driving, on the part of someone, mixed with inclement weather conditions lie as the cause.

The number of people killed in accidents of this kind equals the record of casualties of wars. We look upon war as being horrible but as yet we have not called the careless drivers together to meet in a congress for the abolition of wrecks.

The big trouble with auto accidents is that we aren't able to get out and compromise as is possible in war.

The Durant Prize

A prize of $25,000 is not to be looked at as something of little value. At least it was found during the recent contest sponsored by W. C. Durant that some 18,000 people were interested enough to try for that amount.

Now that Mr. Mills has taken the check and his solution of the liquor problem stares us in the face as being worth $25,000 we wonder how well it will work.

His economic policy is sound. When the price reaches the point where it is beyond the power to purchase, the demand will thus fall off. But just how is the price to be held high.

Mills states that government officials may supervise the production of alcohol. But it is hardly possible to supervise the production of the backwoods moonshiner and bootlegger. His plan does not work in every section.

What Education Will Do.

A better way it would seem would be to use efforts in the schools and in public to educate the people to the evils of liquor and their duty to keep from breaking the laws.

This last point is one for consideration that is seldom thought of by the average person who considers himself a law-abiding person. Light wines and beers may not be terribly injurious and a person feels that it is safe to partake of them. On the other hand they do not realize that they are breaking a law in so doing.

Something must be done about the liquor problem as it now stands. The present law offers too many chances for a man to be a law-breaker against his common desire.

New Year's Greeting

Gentlemen with whiskers trim,
Nabobs fat and dandies slim,
Ladies short and ladies frill,
Happiness attend you all.
May the year, the coming year
Bring bright smile and merry cheer.
Joyous be your widow's hearth,
Summer days be full of mirth,
Not one shadow dim the hours
But every path be strewn with flowers.
And when at last old Father Time,
Friendly to the song of rhyme,
Digs the grave of '28;
Be it early, be it late,
May rich blessings 'round you raise
In the name of '29.
Short and sweet is an adage old,
"In small parcels cometh gold."
And a blessing when expressed
In a few words is deemed the best.
So may these brief lines appear
Wishing all a happy year.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

MARY GRAHAM BONNER

The fairies had one of their fine balls and two evenings ago.

Among their guests were the brownies, elves, gnomes, many of the birds, butterflies, hummingbirds, red lizards, grasshoppers and crickets.

The crickets had arranged to sing for the dancing and the hummingbirds said they would hum the tunes all the time that the crickets sang.

The robins sang some extra songs, and, of course, the other birds joined in the chorus.

Then came supper time. The table was made of daisies and snow, and such delicacies!

Well, it would have made your mouth water!

They had the goodies that every guest would enjoy most. Not a guest was forgotten. There were even little worms for the birds—and the other guests didn't mind at all, as they knew the robins and orioles and other bird guests loved little worms.

They were given to the birds in special dishes made of grass.

But just as all the guests sat down to supper the Fairy Queen said:

"Come, all my fine waiters! And as she said this she waved her wand high in the air.

Then from far and near the blackest of black crows flew down and alighted all around the table.

They had promised the Fairy Queen to be just as good as good could be, and to wait on all the guests before they had anything at all to eat.

They were quite willing to do this, for they had never been invited to a ball given by the fairies before and they were highly flattered.

They all had had their black suits polished and brushed with the greatest care and they wore very fine aprons and hat hats made of green leaves.

Every time a guest said, "Thank you," when anything was passed, a crows would say, "Caw-caw," which they meant to sound like "You're welcome."

The crows always say "caw-caw" to almost everything, but it is just the tone they use that makes the "caw-caw" mean something quite different each time they want it to.

At the end of the supper, after the crows had had a feast, too, the Fairy Queen asked them if they wouldn't sing the old, old song about blackbirds being baked in a pie.

At first the crows looked a bit sad, but then they said:

"Why, of course, we'll be happy to sing it.

"It's lots of fun to sing about such things after we have had a feast and know quite well that the Fairy Queen wouldn't bake us in a pie, even if we could get out afterward."

How the guests did laugh to hear the crows singing about blackbirds being baked in a pie—and stopping every minute to shout out:

"Not us, though, oh, no!"

And the Fairy Queen was very much delighted.

The next big day we have to look forward to is Ground Hog Day.

Speaking of holidays reminds us that they are over and probably after a few more days of reminiscence we will be able to settle down to work.

We never would think of making a path to the door of the man who makes a better mouse trap, because we have no mice, but we would be willing to pave a road to the front porch of the fellow who can invent a razor that leaves a little skin on the face and removes the whiskers.

Discover Volume of Goethe's Works

A sketchbook made by the poet Goethe more than a hundred years ago has been discovered by German art connoisseurs and placed in the Goethe Museum at Weimar. This book of sketch drawings, which Goethe called his "Little Book of Travel, Amusement, and Consolation," shows him to have possessed considerable artistic talent. According to a German newspaper, Die Woche, Goethe's literary executors overlooked or forgot this sketchbook. Although the poem that accompanies it was known, neither the name, the contents, nor the very existence of the book of drawings was discovered until recently. The drawings were made on a winter trip from Weimar to Jena in 1807, when Goethe was fifty-eight years old. Die Woche calls the little book "a wholly unknown volume of Goethe's poems done in landscapes."

No heart palpitation; no dread constipation:
No nervous prostration; no Doctor to pay.
Two cups in the morning and again two at night,
Just keep you a feeling—fresh, healthy and bright.

You brew it the same as you do your coffee,
Only cook it much longer—its cereal, you see.
A third of an hour after it comes to a boil,
Or longer, won't hurt it, if you're busy with toil.
A tablespoonful, to a cup, is the measure,
And one for the pot, if strength is your pleasure.
Should you have any over, don't throw it away,
For tomorrow 'twill taste just as good as today.
So a good double portion for supper you brew,
And re-heat in the morning, when minutes are few.

Three pounds for a dollar is the price you will pay
For something that's better than Coffee or Tay.
'Till your grocer has stocked it, you may get your supply.
Direct from the source where the wholesalers buy.
You send us a dollar, with name and address,
And three pounds we ship you: by parcel post? Yes.
So before you forget, just tear off and sign
The order blank following this effort of mine.
Then, after you've tried it, and found it all right,
You may wish to endorse it, in rhyme, that is right.

The Hilltop Record

Of interest to the People of the Hilltop and Vicinity

Volume XII — THE HILLTOP, COLUMBUS, OHIO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 10, 1929 — Number 37

Civic Matters And Gift of Ford Are B. M. Topics

Councilman Green Outlines Improvements to Be Realized by City in Coming Months.

Civic improvements for the Hilltop and plans for the presentation of the Ford Tudor Sedan on February 1 occupied the attention of members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association at their meeting Tuesday night at Matsonia.

Councilman Floyd Green was the speaker. He explained phases of the work of city council and of parts of interest to the Hilltop.

In connection with the proposed cut in the library appropriation, Green stated that the outlook was favorable that the Hilltop branch would not suffer from a cut. He expressed a keen interest in the local library.

Green pointed out that sewer relief here depended in a large measure upon the sale of water by the city to the county. This relief is a thing of the near future, however, water pressure here will be aided when a large storage tank is erected on the Hilltop within six or eight months.

He expressed a desire for traffic lights for the Hilltop. Members of the association suggested that they be placed at Oakley and Eureka avenues.

Other improvements mentioned by Green were a full time city council and an addition to the east wing of the City Hall.

Post Office Up Again

It was reported at the meeting that Congressman John C. Speaks has promised his aid in getting a post-office for the Hilltop.

A committee was appointed to represent the business men in the dedication of the new West High school.

Final plans for the presentation of the Ford car were made at the meeting. There will be 24 stubs drawn and the numbers will be placed in the stores of the merchants the morning following the drawing. If the winning number is not presented by March 1, the alternate numbers receive consideration in their order.

Following a long struggle city council voted on Monday night to disapprove changing the zoning of 2778 W. Broad St., from C-1 business to C-1 first industrial district. The vote was 5-2.

A few weeks ago, in committee, council favored the ice company. Since that time a committee investigated the traffic at Hague and Broad and concluded that the establishment of the ice manufacturing plant by the City Ice and Fuel Co., would congest traffic to the extent that it would be more dangerous.

Merchants at Hague and Broad and the Hilltop Business Men's Association fought the action of the ice firm.

New West High School May Open January 28

Re-districting Will tend to Relieve Crowded Conditions of Hilltop Schools.

It will soon be moving day at West High school if present plans of school officials work out as expected, and classes for the second semester begin in the new million-dollar high school building located on South Powell avenue at Olive street.

The semester will end January 25 and the new one is scheduled to start on Monday, Jan. 28. About fifteen hundred pupils will enroll. A redistricting is now being completed for the Hilltop schools and the numbers from some of the crowded ones will be reduced. Pupils from Highland Junior high will make up a great part of the additional number in the new building.

Teaching staff at the new building will remain the same in most instances.

The Girl Scouts of Troop 22 spent Saturday, Dec. 26, at Camp Mitchell. They assembled at Hoge Memorial church and were taken to the camp by Mrs. Berry, Mrs. Stone and Mr. Swickard.

The camp site was explored by the girls while a steak dinner was prepared by Mrs. Berry and Mrs. Stone. After dinner a few games were played and then a hike through the woods. On returning to the camp more games were played and songs were sung.

Those present were: Mrs. T. B. Berry, Mrs. B. F. Stone, Helen Berry, Geraldine Cook, Dora Dungren, Anita Jones, Rosemary Klueg, Helen Marshall, Dorothy Penick, Virginia Schenz, Jane Stone, Geraldine Stone and Edna Swickard.

MEETING POSTPONED

The meeting of study group No. 4 of mothers in Miss Barry's room, West Broad school, which was to be held on January 17, has been postponed until next month.

DORCAS CLASS MEETING

The Dorcas class of St. Paul's Evangelical Congregational church met Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Dixon, 479 S. Warren Ave. After devotional led by Mrs. Poulson and lesson study by Rev. Broadway, the class engaged in a written contest on geographical locations and historical events of the Bible. With a certain display of scholarly nervousness and much whispering "at teacher's back" a remarkable high score of 50 per cent was attained, 85 the assuming to acknowledge the lowest. The first prize, a box of stationery, and second prize, a vase, was accredited to Mrs. Ditrick and Mrs. Poulson, respectively. Mrs. Baker and Mrs. Dixon tied for third prize, a pin cushion, and on the "draw" it fell to Mrs. Dixon. Rev. Broadway served as judge insofar as the class members would acquiesce. The hostess served popcorn balls and candy.

Mr. James Ham, 163 N. Harris Ave., in company with his brother, Mr. Samuel Ham, Hillsdale, Mich., and nephew Clarence Ham, Findlay, O., left last week to visit the former's son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Wright at Orlando, Fla. Mrs. Elmer Ham and daughter Mary, 227 N. Ogden Ave., returned Monday from a two week's visit with Mr. and Mrs. Wright. They report an enjoyable trip.

Pride and Penitence

By MARCELLA S. CARLSTON

The following day, when she returned home from school, Mary found a letter from Paul in the mailbox, as her aunt had neglected to look for mail that day. The girl ran upstairs two steps at a time, anxious to examine the contents of the letter. At the top of the stairs, she met her aunt.

"What have you there, Mary?" the woman asked.

"A letter from a friend."

"Let me see it."

She snatched it from the girl's hand, and read the return address. As she showed no tendency to return it to the girl, Mary said:

"Please, Aunt Addie, let me have it. I am so anxious to read it."

"Evidently," the woman said, sourly. "But being your guardian until you complete your schooling, I shall be compelled to return it unopened, and you must promise me to have no further communications with this boy, whoever he is. I cannot allow you to make the mistake your mother did, while you are under my care."

"But mother approves of him. I have known him nearly all my life, and besides, his father is the wealthiest man in Centerville."

This last sentence was a slight exaggeration from the truth, and was uttered only to influence her aunt, as Mary had often wished that Paul was one of her own class, as he had been at one time, in the days when Mr. Randall had been less prosperous than he was now.

"Your mother approves of him!" Miss Spencer's tone was almost a sneer, while she chose to ignore the latter part of Mary's statement. "Your mother approved of Samuel Hunter, too," she added, "but few people seemed to agree with her."

"I, for one, am of the same opinion with mother. As I remember him, my father was always good to me, and to her. If he had not died so young, and met with so much misfortune, I am sure that he would have retrieved himtwo servants of the Spencer home, Nancy and the chauffeur, Tom Brenton, self in the eyes of all who knew him. Besides, it is unjust to make uncomplimentary remarks about a man who cannot return to defend himself," Mary added with growing indignation.

"Be careful, young lady. You, at least, owe me the respect due a woman of my age, for the education you are receiving at my expense. Please do not mention this Paul Randall or your father to me again," she said, forgetting she had started the subject herself.

"Won't you please give me my letter?" the girl pleaded.

"No. And I want you to promise me that you will not write to him, as I have said that I have other plans for you."

"But I prefer to make my own plans," Mary insisted, stubbornly.

Miss Spencer ignored the statement.

"You will do as I say?" she questioned.

"I suppose so," Mary replied, with mental reservations. She was not forbidden to write to her mother, so the only way to communicate with Paul was to request her mother to correspond with him, informing him of the girl's activities, and vice versa. She only hoped that her aunt would not insist upon reading her mother's letters. As the two women now corresponded, she did not believe that Miss Spencer would be interested in the letters Mary received from home.

In this, the girl was mistaken, however, as her aunt was a shrewd person, and she suspected that Mary would use this plan to communicate with her lover. From then on, every letter Mary wrote or received passed through the hands of Miss Spencer for her approval.

"I feel like severing diplomatic relations with her and, going to work," Mary confided to one of her school chums, "but I really want to complete my education, and working for necessary funds would delay me indefinately."

"Don't do such a dumb stunt as that," the girl, Betty Landon, advised. "You're in luck to have an opportunity to live with your aunt, even if she is empty-headed. Get yourself another boy friend and forget this small-town dude. Chances are, by this time, that he has another sweetie anyway."

Mary's face took on a serious expression. What did Paul think of her? He had probably received the letter he had written to her, which had been returned unopened. What would he think? Maybe he would blame her, Mary, for it, and console himself by

UNDERGROUND CROSSINGS

A year ago two persons were killed at the Big Four crossing in West Broad street when a flyer hit their car. Since that time money has been appropriated by the city and the railroad company for a viaduct at that point thus eliminating the crossing.

Last week another death was marked up to the toll of railway crossing victimes here on the Hilltop.

Millions of dollars will be spent over the country this year for the elimination of such crossings. This may be a large amount of money but at the same time there is no comparison between money and life. A few thousand dollars may well be used for crossing signs and warnings or the elimination of crossings in this vicinity.

TIME TO CLEAN UP

A walk past the front of the stores in the business section of the Hilltop will show those of the merchants who are most progressive to be clean at all times.

Continued use of the sidewalks will soon get them littered up with papers and dirt but there is no good reason why every merchant should not make it a point to see that the walks in front of his business house are clean.

This will make for a cleaner and more inviting Hilltop.

A cut in electric prices sounds interesting to those who may receive the benefits but for the man under 50 kilowatt hours it is just a lot of figures.

The west carries with it a note of pioneering and we are proud of the fact that the Hilltop is the western extremity of an enterprising city.

Highways are happy ways as long as the gas holds out and the air stays in.

A Hilltop auto show is a thing of the near future as soon as we find a place in which to hold it.

BUILDING MATERIAL MERCHANTS

Howard Ave. and W. Broad St.

"If it's worth building use good materials"

The Spectator

"The little things make us realize we are human beings."

The Razor Episode

There is a story of a man who was well enough known to all the members of the firm for which he was working with the exception of the president of the firm. In this case as in most large firms, specialization had stamped itself all over the floor space and about the only ones who knew the "chief" were those who took stenographic notes from him and carried his messages to others in the building.

Then one day, the particular employe of the firm we have in mind was riding the elevator with the president. A conversation arose about razors. This was overheard by the "chief" and immediately he expressed his thoughts. Not being satisfied with an explanation he had given of a razor he admired he sent out a boy to purchase one.

Calling his listeners together he told them of its qualities and after an hour of conversation along other lines decided it was time to go to lunch. Thereafter other members of the firm had an admiration for him that was not present before. A razor had served to make them understand each other.

The Man High Up

There was a time, not so many years ago, when the man who applied for a job did so to the owner of the business and thereafter his actions were directed by this same man.

Labor conditions have changed and although labor is yet considered as a commodity by many it is tending to lose its human element in many cases. A person works his eight-hour day at one machine and knows little of what is going on in other sections of the building.

Especially so is the man high up far beyond the reach of the worker. The immediate interest is tending to be lost. Seldom is it possible for the man in the job below to get in contact with the man above. The little things that make us realize we are all human beings such as stated above are rare occurances.

The Time Intermediate

A review of the labor conditions of the past thirty years will reveal a period that was a first disagreeable for the proletariate and which was thought to be the possible destruction of our economic order.

The man with capital was seen to be crushing in devouring the soul of the worker. His idea it appeared was to produce the most at the expense of his labor. But working conditions and long hours were noticeable.

Then government regulations came along forcing the manufacturer to change his methods, to the advantage of the worker.

The present is a time intermediate to that of the future is the belief of many. Sanitary conditions and shorter hours have been outstanding improvements in the methods of producers within the past few years. This system prevails at present, but for a short time only if experiments work out.

The Future

Some far-sighted men can see an entirely different system for the future. A study of the experiments and the practices of a few men of industry, especially Henry Ford, bring us to the conclusion that the future holds much for the individual.

A prediction that cannot be far from wrong is that another five years will find the five-day week, higher wages, better working conditions and a personal interest of the factory officials in the family welfare of the worker, predominate.

What It All Means

All this means little more than that the manufacturer or producer has learned he can get better results if he shows a keener interest in his employes.

Profit sharing plans have been tried by many concerns and found to be successful. This alone creates an interest in the business by the worker and he in turn speeds up and does better work. He knows that more gain for the employer means more for himself. Then, too, there is the satisfaction of working for ones self.

Furthermore a five-day week means more leisure time and hence more time in which to make improvements about the home. Improvements and leisure time call for more consumption goods which in turn means a greater demand and increased production, thus assuring a greater benefit in a greater number.

Corona Due to Argon

In 1869, during an eclipse of the sun, astronomers noticed a strange green line in the spectrum of the sun's corona, or outer layer. Later a group of unknown lines was discovered in the corona. The mysterious substance thought to be responsible for these manifestations, called coronium, has been the cause of speculation ever since. Dr. Ira M. Freeman has discovered, as a result of researches carried on at the Ryerson Physical Laboratory of the University of Chicago, that coronium is probably due to argon, the third most abundant gas in the air.

The PEOPLES COLUMN

Mr. Editor: It is inspiring and helpful to one's Christian faith to know that there are so many true and sympathetic hearts all around us, so many real glimpses of the Christmas spirit as exemplified by Jesus.

While the undersigned were confined to their home and most of the time to their beds, during this wonderful season, the kindly remembrances of friends was an oasis along the way.

We cannot express how much we enjoyed the Christmas carols by our splendid young people of Glenwood. Then, the beautiful flowers from the Barraca class, the Bethany Bible class and the W. C. T. U., all bespeaking a friendly interest that is most highly appreciated by us. We are thankful to say that we are on the way to speedy recovery, when we hope to see our friends again.

Rev. and Mrs. P. W. Drumm.

Films Development of Chicken in Egg

Carl D. Clarke, a medical illustrator at the University of Maryland, has invented a strange machine which is a combination eight-day electric clock, powerful microscope, and moving picture camera. If it is set properly, it will make a film showing the growth of a plant. No attention from a human being is necessary. It is hoped that besides filming the development of plants the new machine will be able to show the life history of germs, and even the development of a chicken within the egg. The electric clock governs the rate at which the camera, directed through the microscope, shall take pictures.

Fish Is Dangerous

Dr. E. W. Gudger, of the American Museum of Natural History, and C. M. Breder, Jr., of the New York Aquarium, stated in an article in the Journal of the American Medical Association that the barracuda is of all fish probably the most dangerous to man. The large, savage, pikelike fish, which is found in tropical waters, is almost as large as a twelve-year-old boy. The natives of the Carribean Gulf region fear the barracuda more than the shark, for the barracuda, unlike the shark, depends on sight more than on sense of smell in food-getting. Any flashing object attracts the barracuda, which is likely to strike immediately. It never strikes more than once, but the single attack often results in death or severe injury to the victim.

TEAMWORK

Football, baseball or business requires teamwork for efficiency. The management of a well-directed household also looks for efficiency.

THE MANAGER—

So far as buying goes, the wife of most households takes care of that part. She is the manager.

You say she knows her groceries, yes—and she knows where to buy 'em at a price that's right too—and where quality and service are dominant—and that goes for socks, shoes, hats, furniture, dish pans, drugs or whatever else the family needs.

The wife knows the advantage of trading in her own community, and the merchant understands her wants and co-operates with her. There is teamwork here.

A TASTY SALAD

To make a tasty Spanish salad take two large tomatoes which are rich in the life-giving vitamines, add two green peppers, three small oranges and one tablespoonful of minced onion. Cut each tomato into three slices. Discard the seeds from the green peppers and cut into rings. Peel the oranges, discarding the membrane and seeds, if any. Arrange each salad plate put a slice of tomato, top it with a ring of pepper and fill the center with the orange cut into bits. Add the onion to the French dressing which is prepared with four tablespoonfuls of oil to one of lemon juice, a fourth teaspoonful of salt, a few dashes of cayenne and the tablespoonful of onion. Beat well with an egg beater before adding the onion, then mix and pour over each serving.

While the fresh coconuts may be bought in the market is the time to buy a few, peel off the brown inner skin and grate them. Mix with sugar enough to keep the mixture from fermenting and set in a cold place. A bowl of this fresh coconut cannot be compared to the canned or dry variety. Use it in salads, in cake fillings and desserts.

Soak one cupful of kidney beans overnight. In the morning boil them in water to cover, adding salt when nearly cooked. Put a tablespoonful of butter in a frying pan and cook one large onion finely chopped; when the onion is brown, add the beans with one-fourth of a can of tomatoes and one-fourth of a cupful of macaroni broken into bits. Simmer until the macaroni is done, season well and serve.

The niggie mitts or metal dish cloths are especially good as labor savers. They may be used when a dish is especially hard to wash, without any scrubbing powder, doing it very quickly, or if polish is needed, it will quickly shine the dull dishes, with the addition of scouring soap or powder.

It's a Grand and Glorious feeling to have your home protected with an Equitable six per cent loan. Phone Depew Realty, UN. 3000.

A dish mop used for washing dishes will be a great saving on the hands, as hotter water may then be used and the process quickened.

NEW WHIPPET MODELS LARGER AND ROOMIER

Fours and Sixes Completely Redesigned, Set New Standard of Beauty in Low Priced Field.

Development of body lines that strike a note of beauty and quality, heretofore found only in cars that sell in the higher price ranges, is seen in Willys-Overland's announcement of its completely redesigned lines of Whippet four and six-cylinder cars.

The lowness of the prices on both lines completes the marvel of the achievement. Much interest is being manifest and many orders are being taken for delivery according to C. M. Thorpe, local dealer.

President John N. Willys, one of the largest automobile manufacturers, now brings high priced car beauty and greater value to the low priced field in addition to presenting a car of proved mechanical excellence. This development follows just two and one-half years after his successful introduction of the original Whippet.

In presenting the new Whippet fours and sixes, Mr. Willys says: "When the original Whippet was introduced, designed along lines that entirely revolutionized the light car field, it was predicted that within two years every car manufacturer in the Whippet classification would be forced to adopt the mechanical features first set by the Whippet or be relegated to the obsolete group. This particularly applied to four-wheel brakes.

Dog Hysteria

Dog owners in England are puzzled by a new disease of dogs which resembles a temporary hysteria. The dog apparently goes mad for a few moments, but appears unharmed after the attack is over. It is very unusual to find an entirely new disease such as this, and doctors are much interested in isolating the germ and finding the cause.

You'll do better at Seiller's after all.

Pride and Penitence

finding another girl somewhere in New York where he had now gone in an attempt to start life "on his own."

Before many days, Mary received a letter in strange handwriting, bearing a Centerville postmark. It was from Gertrude Matthews.

"Dear Mary," it began. "I imagine your are homesick for news from your home-town once in a while, and as your mother doesn't seem to be away from home long enough to know what is going on, I am writing to you, myself."

The girl gave a brief account of certain happenings, and ended the letter with: "I received a letter from Paul Randall this morning. By this time, he has fully recovered from the shock he received when you returned his last letter unopened, and is transferring his attentions to me. Kathryn sends her 'love'(?)."

Mary had no doubt that Kathryn had helped Miss Matthews compose the insulting letter, as she could not imagine one person so filled with ill-will toward another one, and she definately decided to have vengeance on both girls, as soon as she was free to return to Centerville, though as yet, she did not have a special plan in mind.

CHAPTER V

At the close of her first school year, Mary was promoted to the tenth grade. During her vacation, she attended summer school, and at the beginning of the fall term, because a high school junior. She was now permitted by her aunt to attend the social functions of the Junior class. Her sunny disposition, which was the same always, whether skies were gray or bright, had won many friends of both sexes. Betty Lanston was her favorite girl chum, while Ray Warner, who was not lacking in self-confidence, considered himself uppermost in her thoughts, day and night. He had no doubt that any girl honored with his valuable society and assiduous attentions, could do other than rejoice that luck had favored her. Had he known of Mary's unchangeable regard for Paul Randall, his egotism would have received a severe jolt.

Mary had not yet become strongly attached to her aunt, as she felt that no one had the right to separate lovers for any reason whatsoever. Being dependent on her aunt's generosity, however, she did her best to please Miss Spencer whenever possible. She attended school dances, class parties and picnics, entering almost whole-heartedly into the spirit of the occasion. One evening, while waiting for Ray to buy admission tickets to the theater, she watched the crowd of people passing along, when a pair of familiar eyes met hers. It was Paul, who came toward her. Then, seeing Ray Warner take hold of her arm possessively, the person whom she loved more than anyone in the world, disappeared in the crowd, with jealously and disappointment clearly stamped on his features.

"I suppose he thinks that I am not entitled to the same privileges he enjoys. He expects me to sit around while he makes love to Gertrude. Probably thinks that I never receive news from home.—Well, two can play that game, whether he approves of it or not. I should worry!" Mary thought.

She tried hard to enjoy the play, but found that she was answering her companion only in monosyllables. Ray had not seen the little by-play in front of the theater, so consequently his egotism remained undisturbed. The next letter which Mary received from home informed her that a rumor existed to the effect that Gertrude Matthews and Paul Randall were engaged, but, as yet, the engagement had not been formally announced, as the wedding was not expected to take place until two years, as Paul had no intention of marrying until financially able to do so, independent of his father's assistance.

"Two years," Mary repeated to herself. "That will give me one year after I return to Centerville to thwart that ambitious young lady's schemes. But I wonder how I shall manage it I suppose, as Nancy says, that 'there'll be a way provided.'"

Mary began her work as a Senior in the classes held during the second summer of her life in the city. At the close of the mid-year term, the following winter, she was ready to receive her diploma; but as commencement exercises were not to be held until the following spring, Mary spent the remainder of the year improving her music. At home, Mrs. Hunter had managed to give her daughter two years instruction on the violin, and being naturally talented, the girl improved greatly under a master's careful training.

When spring came, Mary was requested to play the part of a duke in the Senior class play. The first time she surveyed herself in the long mirror in the dressing room near the stage of the school auditorium, she burst out in laughter.

"No one would recognize me as 'the daughter of the Irish washerwoman' in this outfit," she decided. "I look for all the world like a blue blood from England."

She again surveyed her small figure, and moved her eyebrows thoughtfully. "If a Count was to visit Centerville," she murmured to herself, "and pay attention to the ambitious Miss Matthews I wonder if she wouldn't feel flattered."

The more Mary thought of the plan, the better she liked it. For years she had been subjected to slurs and sneers from the majority of the people living in Centerville, and she wondered how it would feel to be worshipped by them, even if she did have to appear in disguise. Only one thing puzzled her. A duke would be expected to have plenty of money and to spend it freely. Miss Spencer had supplied the girl with spending money, but Mary had saved very little of it.

Her problem was solved in an unexpected manner. One day she and her aunt were downtown shopping. Miss Spencer had decided that she needed a new living room rug, and entered her favorite furniture store in search of one. After an hour's time, she selected one suited to her taste, and after making the purchase, walked toward the front of the store.

"Just a moment please, auntie. That sign says: "Chance on Chrysler Sedan given with each purchase of one dollar or more."

"Well, what of it? I don't want any of their tickets. They already know who will be the winner. Come on, let's hurry."

But Mary was determined to have that ticket. "Might as well take all that you are entitled to," she reasoned.

"Just keep it, if you value it so highly," her aunt said.

Mary placed the ticket in a barrel provided for that purpose, and put the stub in her purse. A few days later, while walking past the furniture store, she saw a sign in the window: "Number 325790-M wins Chrysler Coach."

Soon the happy girl presented her ticket to a clerk in the store.

"Would you prefer the car or one thousand dollars in cash?" the manager of the store asked her.

"I believe that I prefer the money," Mary replied.

When she informed Miss Spencer of her exceptionally good luck, the woman asked:

"Why didn't you take the automobile instead?"

"The cost of upkeep would be too expensive. They won't run on soap suds you know."

Discuss S. S. Work

All phases of Sunday School work will be discussed by the delegates to the Franklin County Sunday School Convention to be held in Central Presbyterian church January 21 and 22.

Watch Your Step Is School Motto

Believing that safety is one of the essential things to be taught in the schools, teachers at West Broad school are doing just that thing and have been following a definite program that deals with the child in the classroom.

Each month a different program is followed according to that part of safety which is most appropriate. January safety sheet, published for guidance states that the motto for the month is "Watch Your Step" and the pledge is "We shall use more care in our walk as well as in our play during the months of snow and ice."

Topics for discussion included the following.

1. Keep walks cleared of ice and snow.
2. Use of sleds and skates.
3. Skating on thin ice.
4. Best places to slide.
5. Danger of snow balling.
6. Extra care in walking on and crossing streets.
7. Sliding in streets.
8. Tripping and its dangers.
9. Proper kind of clothing.

Some winter precautions--

1. Sprinkle sawdust, ashes or salt on icy spots in sidewalk
2. Do not shovel snow into gutters; they must be left free to allow good drainage.

Father and Son Perfect Homemade Television Set

Working in a field that is practically unknown a Hilltop father and son have been successful to the extent that they are probably the first in the city to actually receive pictures in their own home over a television set which they have completed themselves.

M. J. Mercier and son M. J. Jr., 733 S. Park Ave., recently received a letter from station WGY at Schenectady, N. Y., verifying the fact that their reception had been successful.

Now they are receiving pictures at regular times when they are broadcast from WGY, weather conditions being suitable.

On November 25 they perceived queer designs in the television mirror and then the letters WGY. Then they saw a human face turning from side to side and moving its lips. Two other objects were also recorded.

They reported this to the General Electric Co., and a stamp of verification was sent to them by the broadcasting company.

In one room on the second floor of their home the Merciers have a laboratory filled with radio equipment. At present the father is manager of the radio department of Kerr's Furniture store and does not have much time to devote to the experiment. The son, however, is a junior at Central High school and spends all his spare time in his laboratory.

The successful set was built by young Mercier. With other equipment which he had accumulated he spent fifteen cents more and after a few trials had a working set that actually showed the characters in New York state.

Young Mercier states that he began working with radio when crystal sets first made their appearance. At that time he was in the fifth grade at school. The family has lived on the Hilltop since June.

WGY broadcast television on Sundays from 11:15 to 11:30 p. m.; Tuesdays from 11:30 to 12, and on Thursdays and Fridays on a short wave from 1:30 to 2 p. m. Mercier states that he is now building a short wave receiving set.

At present they are also in the radio repair business and are equipped to do any kind of work.

The boy says television is now where radio was six years ago. The future of it is not known and it is in a mere experimental stage at present. Very few sets that have been made have been successful.

Mrs. Fannie O. Mossman, 55, 168 S. Harris Ave., was found dead in her bed Monday morning. She was found with a seven-foot cloth belt about one inch wide about her neck.

Protests of relatives caused Coroner Murphy to reiterate his verdict of suicide by strangulation. Murphy said the family stated that she had been suffering from sore throat and the wrappings around her neck were for an aid to the illness.

She is survived by her husband, Thomas H. Mossman; two daughters, Mrs. Carrie Hafey of Durall, and Mrs. Mae M. Wilcox at home; a brother and two sisters.

Funeral services were held Wednesday at the residence with burial in Memorial Burial Park by C. J. Kohn.

Local Boy Scout Awarded Gold Medal for Heroism

National recognition was recently awarded a Hilltop Boy Scout for his bravery of two summers ago when he saved the lives of two young ladies while in bathing at Buckeye Lake.

News of the award of the Boy Scouts of America Gold Medal to Joseph Erlenwein, 18, 288 Lechner Ave., member of Troop 21, Boy Scouts, meeting at Hoge Memorial church, came Monday, following the meeting of the national court of honor at New York. Two other awards were made but that of Erlenwein was the major one.

Joseph, who is a junior at Central High school, didn't learn of the honor until after he had gone to school Monday morning. He was called to the office and later he said he wondered what they could want with him. At the school office he was faced by photographers and was then told of his award.

"If it wasn't for the Scouts I never would have done it," he told a Record reporter Monday evening. "It took me two years to learn to swim but now I can't keep out of the water."

Last August the Record carried the story of Joseph's heroism which he was so modest as to conceal for so long. Scoutmaster R. C. Kudel was instrumental in letting the story out and also in securing the medal for Joseph.

While Mrs. Clifford Lewis was teaching Miss Gladys Anderson to swim in Buckeye Lake in July, 1927, Miss Anderson became frightened, getting a strangle hold on Mrs. Lewis and causing them both to go under.

Erlenwein, noticing the attempts of the young ladies to keep from going under, went to their assistance. After the couple had gone under three times Joseph pulled them to shore by means of his Scout swimming methods and thus saved their lives.

One of the peculiar features of the whole affair lies in the fact that the Scout did not learn to swim until after he had spent two summers at the task. All his other Scout merit badges were easily made but the one for swimming threatened to keep him from advancing. Now he is a Star Scout with six years of scouting service behind him.

No exact time for awarding the medal has been set but it will probably be at school next week or during the annual Scout week program in February.

Typing Class Has New Method

The typewriting classes at West High are progressing rapidly under Mrs. Genieve Rueston. She has established a new system similar to the Dalton plan.

At the beginning of the year the students are instructed in the principles of typing then after about three weeks are given a group of exercises to complete within each semester. The individual student then goes ahead as rapidly as possible.

One-third of Mrs. Rueston's pupils completed their projects two weeks ahead of time. This gives them a grade of E plus in typewriting. A sliding scale has been established. No pupil who has not completed his work can pass the course.

This department has been a great aid to many other departments in the school by making stencils and notes for the teachers.

Cream two tablespoonfuls of butter or other sweet fat, add it to a quarter of a teaspoonful of mustard; spread the bread with this. Dip slices of beef into the hot sauce and place them on the bread. Sprinkle with a very little chopped bacon on the top slice. Serve on a hot platter and pour boiling sauce over all. To make the brown sauce, melt two tablespoonfuls of butter; add two tablespoonfuls of flour and stir until well browned; add salt and pepper to taste, and a cupful of beef gravy.

Beef Pie

Cut cold roast beef into inch squares, using two cupfuls. Put into a quart baking dish and season with half a teaspoonful of salt, a dash of red pepper, a tablespoonful of tomato catsup or one cupful of tomatoes strained and seasoned. Pour over the meat one cupful of broth, or gravy mixed with water. Cover with a crust made of baking powder biscuit dough; cut with a small cutter and place over the top.

There is no more delicious way of serving cold roast beef than in thin, rosy slices on a well-garnished platter. Serve with cucumber or horseradish sauce.

Roast Beef With Mexican Sauce

Cook one onion finely chopped in two tablespoonfuls of butter for five minutes. Add one red pepper, one green pepper and one clove of garlic, each finely chopped, and two tomatoes peeled and sliced. Cook fifteen minutes, add one teaspoonful of worcestershire sauce, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of celery salt and salt to taste.

Better Work In Quiet Workroom

If their workroom is noisy persons have to work very hard to achieve a minimum result, according to the Literary Digest. From experiments made on typists the average time for typing a letter was found to be 162 seconds under noisy conditions, as compared with 155 seconds when the noise was reduced approximately to half. This represents an average gain in speed four and three-tenths per cent when the noise is reduced.

Black Diamonds Are Valuable

Diamonds occur naturally only in volcanic formations, the largest supply originating in South Africa, where over a billion dollars' worth of diamonds have been produced. In South Africa they are found in "pipes"—circular shafts of unknown depth, tipped off with a mound or kopje ten or twelve feet in height. These deep chimneys are filled with bluish mud which surrounds the crystals. Most of our best stones come from these pipes, believed to be volcanic in origin. In new Transvaal diggings, Dr. Hans Merensky recently observed that gravel carrying diamonds often contains fossil oyster shells also. He bought a strip of ground showing these shells and uncovered one of the richest diamond fields.

Black diamonds are scarcer than brilliants, and almost as valuable. They look like sharp-cornered cinders, from the size of peas to that of baseballs. These black diamonds, entirely lacking in luster, serve as tough cutting edges for rock and steel drills, and also for glass, fiber, and pearl cutters, marble saws, and so on.

Pride and Penitence

By MARCELLA S. CARLSTON

"Of course not, but this morning I found a will of later date than the one which took effect immediately after the death of your grandfather, and as I am an honest woman, even if I am stern at times, I feel that you should have your mother's share. The document I discovered this morning was not under seal, so I am acquainted with the terms of it. It states that you are to receive your mother's share as soon as you are of age, which will be next week. I should not be doing this if your father were here to share it, as none of the Spencer money was ever intended for a Hunter, but your name will not always be the same as it is now, so I am glad that you are to have what is due you."

Mary was both happy and indignant, happy because of the new turn things had taken; indignant, as she always was when her aunt mentioned Mr. Hunter.

CHAPTER VI

Kathryn Randall and Gertrude Matthews arrived at the Randall home one day, after a drive into the country, both breathless and excited.

"Just think," Kathryn exclaimed to her brother, Paul. "A real, genuine English nobleman in town. Something, at last, has happened to break the monotony of this burg."

"What are you talking about, Katy? I fail to see the attraction that would bring such a person to this place. Are you sure you weren't dreaming?"

"No, Paul. Nobody is dreaming," Gertrude Matthews said. "I saw him, too. Kathryn and I were driving leisurely along the Freport pike when we heard an airplane, which seemed to be only a few feet above our heads. A minute later, it landed in a field nearby. Something seemed to be wrong with it, which caused the pilot to make a forced landing. Thinking that we might be of service, we parked our car on a side road, and hastened on foot toward the airplane."

"'We saw your predicament, and thought we could be of assistance,' I said to the pilot, though, through the corner of my eye, I was watching the passenger. The man to whom I was speaking said: 'Thanks, girls. It will take some time for me to repair this motor, but Lord Ingleson does not like to be detained, and if you wish, you may take him to the next village in your car.' The man wearing the large silk hat, looked haughtily at us, holding his monocle in his eye in true English fashion. Finally, he condescended to transfer his lordship to our car. We left him at the Park Hotel."

Gertrude had given Kathryn no opportunity to finish the description which she had commenced. Now, however, she attempted to say a few words.

"During the drive, he seemed to be bored by our society, but when I mentioned the fact that I was the daughter of R. J. Randall, he thawed out considerably," Kathryn said.

"Some fortune hunter in disguise, I presume," Paul remarked.

"No, indeed, Paul, you're mistaken," Gertrude said, enthusiastically. "His English accent is perfect. The delightful way he misplaces his H's could not possibly be affected."

"Hi believe you're both 'alf gone hon 'im hairready. Suppose the rest of hus will be very hinsignificant until this monocled H-englishman leaves town."

"Now, Paul, don't try to imitate his accent. It can't be done to perfection by an American. Well, I must be thinking of ways and means to become better acquainted with Lord Ingleson. He said that he intended to remain here for several weeks," Kathryn said.

"If you get ahead of me where Lord Ingleson is concerned, you'll have to hurry," was Gertrude's private thought.

Paul, who was watching her, guessed her thoughts from the expression on her face.

"Wish she would fall for this fake nobleman," he thought.

The friendship, if it could have been called that, which existed between Gertrude and Paul, was foresel by the girl and her father, who wished his daughter to marry the most sought-after young man in the town. Greed was the guide of Mr. Matthew's life. He coveted wealth and money seemed to gravitate toward him, sometimes in an honest manner, but more frequently, otherwise.

When Paul had first gone to New York, he determined to be independent of his father, but after reaching the metropolis he found that the grade was steeper and rougher than he had expected. Therefore, when on his way home for a short vacation, the young man stopped in the town of Freport where Mary was attending school, and unexpectedly found the girl to whom he still considered himself engaged, in company with another gentleman, it was little wonder that he consoled himself with Gertrude's society.

Still desiring to be independent of his father, as he meant to continue as he had begun, Paul realized the necessity for obtaining a loan from some source. After some deliberation, he accepted a loan from Mr. Matthews, entirely ignorant of the fact that his father was enduring mental agony because of business transacted with the same person.

Having learned that Mr. Randall was in bad straits financially, Mr. Matthews bought certain mortgages on properties owned by Mr. Randall. He made certain demands which were impossible to meet, and numerous threats of foreclosure soon followed. They, at the last moment, when Mr. Randall was repenting of having lived above his means, Mr. Matthews, desirous of having Paul for his son-in-law, as that was his daughter's chief desire, and Mr. Matthews had never yet denied the girl anything within his power to obtain, selected that particular time for an interview with Mr. Randall.

"A marriage between your son and my daughter, would make things easier for you," Mr. Matthews had said, and Mr. Randall had partly agreed to the bargain.

When Paul learned of the proposition, he became highly indignant, and had no intention of marrying the girl in question. However, he decided to allow everyone concerned to think that his intentions were of a matrimonial nature, and hoped that, in the meantime, some way out of the difficulty might present itself.

The arrival of Lord Ingleson at that particular time was a relief to Paul's mind, as it would give him and his father more time to adjust their financial difficulties.

CHAPTER VII

In a suite of rooms on the third floor of the Park Hotel, "Lord Ingleson," seated beside a window, gazed dreamily over the city, making plans for the eventual humiliation of two young ladies who at that moment were congratulating themselves, individually, upon having "It."

"Just think," Kathryn Randall was saying to the girl in the dressing table mirror, while she vigorously massaged her face with an expensive cream. "I may have a chance to marry a nobleman."

In imagination, the girl could visualize herself crossing the Atlantic as a first-class passenger, being presented at court, and going to live in a large castle. How the girls of Centerville would envy her! Gertrude Matthews and all of them! As yet, she was not aware of the fact that Miss Matthews had similar intentions herself, and did not expect to become Mrs. Paul Randall if she could claim the title of Lady Ingleson.

GRAND OPERA SEASON WILL OPEN FEB. 18

Chicago Civic Opera Company to Visit Only One City in State.

The Chicago Civic Opera Company, which won extraordinary success last season in its three Columbus appearances, will be presented by the Columbus Grand Opera Association for the second season, on February 18, 19 and 20, when the three well-known operas, Faust, Tosca and Carmen will be heard.

Famous stars of the Chicago company including Garden, Olszewska, Mason, Hackett, Formichi, Mojica, Maison and Ronelli, will be heard in the principal roles. A personnel of over 300, including principals, supporting cast, chorus, ballet and orchestra will be brought to Columbus.

The new Columbus Auditorium, which proved to be ideal for the staging of the opera last year, will be used again this year. All the massive settings and elaborate scenic effects so essential to grand opera can readily be accomodated on the stage, which is the second largest one in Ohio. There will be no "crowding" of sets, no congestion and no changes necessary in the mammoth presentations for which the Chicago company is noted.

Nineteen dressing rooms will take care of the 300 or more persons who comprise the opera troupe. Two of these are of huge size and accomodate the chorus and ballet, another is set aside for the use of the orchestra. The other 16 are for the use of the principals.

Although the Auditorium has a seating capacity of over 6000, only a little more than 4000 seats will be available for each opera, since the committee will not allow the sale of any seat that does not command a complete view of the entire stage.

You'll do better at Seiller's after all.

Therefore, when, the following evening, while attending a performance at the local theater, accompanied by Paul Randall, she saw Kathryn smiling into the face of Lord Ingleson, who seemed to be very attentive to her, Gertrude resolved to some way outwit her rival.

"I shall have to put a stop to that," she thought. "It shouldn't be difficult, either, as Kathryn is so sure of my regard for her brother that she will not at first suspect me of being personally interested in Lord Ingleson."

A RAISE IN STREET CAR FARES

Announcement was recently made by the Rail-Light company that a raise in street car fares is necessary.

Columbus is noted for its five-cent fare and few cities in the country are in the same class. For the man who rides the cars and the student who goes every morning and evening to school via street cars an increase in fares would be disagreeable.

The company states that they are losing a vast sum of money yearly on the car service. One may wonder why they continue to operate. The answer lies in the fact that they profit on the sale of electric to the many concerns of the city.

Car service in the city could be improved in many instances. The cold that is experienced on West Broad cars these wintry mornings is proof of this. However, as long as the company is losing money improvements cannot be expected.

The solution for the matter lies in a joint commission to investigate and reach an agreement.

THE WEST ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

An organization that is due encouragement and praise is an alumni association of any school or college. But we refer only to those that are really working and making endeavors to do some good.

The West High School Alumni Association appears to be deserving of these words. They are at present actively engaged in launching a membership drive. They are also planning for receptions at the new building when it is opened.

During the past few semesters West has apparently had a hard time. In their games and contests the word "Lose" seems to be their fate. However, all faith should not be lost in the school because of a few losing football or basket-ball teams. Neither is it fair to lay the blame to individuals.

A strong alumni association can do much to bolster up the spirit of a school and every West High graduate should feel enough interest in his alma mater to join this association. The fee is small and the benefit to the school is to be great. Why not boost for West High?

The Spectator

The best men aren't attracted to governing positions.

Immature Brains

A noted statesman and author lectured in the city last week concerning one of the most popular but yet worn subjects of the day—peace.

He brought out the fact that when nations prepare for war they get it.

It does not take a great deal of reasoning power to see that this is true. But in Washington, congressmen are dickering over the facts of a simple two paragraph peace treaty that will involve all the nations of the world. Immature brains appear on the stage.

The treaty is the product of an American as well as Europeans. It is remarkable for its shortness and for its clearness. The strangest part perhaps is that it contains no reservations or definitions. For this reason other nations have signified their willingness to sign it or have already signed it while the United States halts on the scene with long congressional debates.

People Want the Treaty

A few days ago the newspapers carried the story of a prolonged congress. The facts of the matter are that some several hundred bills are waiting their approval or disapproval.

There is too much talk in congress that doesn't mean anything. This body of men, supposedly the cream of the legislative pot in this country have earned a reputation of talking more and doing less that any other similar group known.

People back in the states want the acceptance of the Kellogg treaty but congress takes time out for prolonged argument that hangs over the treaty as a constant threat. Like every other measure for peace, this peace-loving nation must object to the agreement.

A Re-districting

As is known, the upper house of congress remains the same and the lower house is supposed to represent the states according to the census of the previous ten-year period.

The last time this re-apportionment was due the members of that body failed to give it the due consideration as stated in the constitution. Now that another congress is in session the question is one of importance.

On the face of the matter it appears that several hundred thousands, in fact several millions in the country are without representation. It is true enough, according to the old census that the distribution is not correct.

If a reapportionment is made it will mean that some states will lose representatives in the lower house and some will gain. Those who are scheduled to lose are fighting the bill. If the same rate of representation is employed under a new census the number of representatives will on the whole be enlarged, because of the great increase in population.

A Better Remedy

It appears that a better remedy would be to have less representatives instead of more. It is easier to select better men if only a few are to be taken and at the same time better men may be drawn into the field if better salaries are appropriated.

Big business has deemed it feasible to pay it's executives large salaries. The president of the United States with all his honor and position at the head of the nation has little in the way of compensation. It is not the salary that attracts a man to political office.

Those who direct the business of large firms receive salaries far in excess of that of the president and members of congress. It appears a better policy therefore to pay more and get better quality. At the same time, a few men of higher caliber will accomplish far more than a whole flock of mere office holders. The best men aren't attracted to governing positions.

The Collegiate Aspect

While on this subject it is logical to get another angle, this time from a college student, Jack Wordley, a member of the club. He states that my last statement above is typical of college.

"There is a race among a few for all the offices. If a new organization is formed these would-be-office holders flock to the meeting in order that they may get elected.

"The fact that they have ability, or can really contribute to the success of the organization is not the main point. It is, instead that they are popular and have earned their title of office seekers. In the most instances a student is not elected on ability. College students don't vote for the man. They vote for the fraternity. Those who are not aligned with fraternities do not vote." So sayeth a college student and a fraternity member.

Surviving are five sons, Clarence, Charles, Wilbert, Sherwood and Fred Jaller of Columbus; two daughters, Mrs. Viola Harris, Cleveland, and Mrs. Susie Searles, Harlem, O. Funeral in charge of C. J. Universal Suffrage In Japan

"In February, Japan held her first general election based on universal suffrage," says the World Work. "Under the old system, by which a tax-paying qualification limited the number of voters, about 5,000,000 Japanese enjoyed the right of suffrage. Under the new universal suffrage law the qualification was abrogated and nearly 10,000,000 new voters became eligible."

TO A MOST IMPORTANT GROUP OF MOTOR CAR BUYERS

Certain American people are getting on in the world. Many of them see just starting. But they're headed up the ladder. Their ideas of luxury and beauty are expanding. They want finer homes, finer furniture, finer automobiles.

During the past three years, hundreds of thousands of these progressive Americans have been buying the Pontiac Six. Some of them have bought it as the first car they ever owned. But to most of them, Pontiac has represented the first big step up from the lowest priced field.

For this progressive group, Oakland has now created a brand new Pontiac Six. It represents an even greater advancement over everything else in its field today than the original Pontiac represented in 1926. It will take its buyers farther than ever up the ladder of motor car quality in one step. Watch for the

Uncommon Sense

By John Blake

FRATERNITIES

It pleased me to hear a member of President Coolidge's cabinet reply to a rather "smarty" attack upon fraternities which had appeared a few months before in a magazine.

The author of this attack took the superior position that intellectual people do not require to mingle with other men on terms of equality, and that the whole purpose of fraternal societies is to enable the members to wear fancier clothes than they do in common life, and to feel more important, because there are no lines of caste. Well, what of it?

Why should not men want to vary the humdrum of their lives?

Why should not the boss want, now and then, to meet the men who work for him without feeling it necessary to be on his dignity and assert his authority?

Why should not the employe like to feel, that on one night a month there is no difference between his position and that of any other man.

Are the conditions of ordinary business life so enchanting that one is not glad to get away from them now and then, and meet his fellows on another plane, even if that plane happens to be modeled on customs which have long passed out of life.

As a matter of fact, a little more fraternity in business would be very much better for the world.

If governments were as careful to take care of their sick and fallen as are some of the societies, there would be less helpless misery to sigh over.

If business establishments were as ready to assure a faithful worker, who had fallen by the way, that his wife and children would not starve, there might be fewer strikes and less unrest.

Men are naturally gregarious.

They do not like to forget their boyhood when it was easy to run in packs.

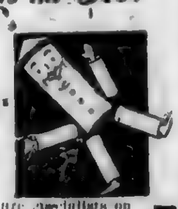
The organizations parrellel those conditions to some extent.

They give middle-aged men a chance to play together—and that is a privilege which is of very great value.



The fact that in England and in the United States there are many millions of people who belong to organizations of great membership proves that getting together is a human need.

There are few people from whom we cannot learn something—and there are always real benefits in a wide acquaintanceship.

AUTO MANUFACTURE REQUIRES MUCH STEEL

Local Dealer Says Car Output Has Big Effect on Industry.

Interesting facts on the quantity of raw material required for the construction of a single automobile body were related here yesterday by the West Side Motors, Inc., local Oakland-Pontiac dealer.

From information supplied by the Oakland Motor Car company, of Pontiac, Michigan, Mr. Althen stated that every five-passenger sedan in the new Oakland All-American line required for its construction 286 board feet of lumber, 21.9 square feet of plate glass, and 252 square feet of sheet steel.

"The large amount of materials that go into a single body," he stated, "explains the wide influence the automobile has upon the economic picture of the United States, and the number of people directly or indirectly affected by the industry. It shows, also, why the automobile annually absorbs more than 60 per cent of all plate glass produced in the United States, fourteen per cent of all the steel, and more than a billion board feet of hard and soft wood.

"Total weight of the finished body on the Oakland All-American sedan is 960 pounds, or approximately one-third the total weight of the car on the road.

"In preparing the steel panels used in building Oakland bodies the Fisher corporation has put into service a toggle press said to be the largest and only one of its kind in the world. Approximately thirteen yards of 54-inch material is used in upholstering the Oakland sedan."

3500-Lb. Lens

A telescope lens has been cast which is seventy inches in diameter, eleven inches thick, and weighs thirty-five hundred pounds. This is the most nearly perfect specimen of its weight and size in the world. It will be used to make a mirror for the telescope at Ohio Wesleyan university.

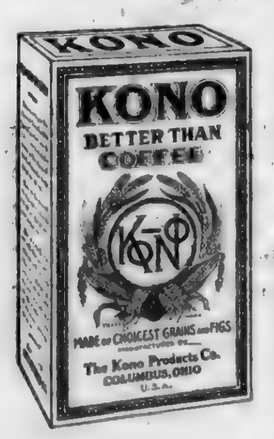
KONO
BETTER THAN COFFEE



TO THE HOUSEWIFE

"Tis Better Than Coffee," for most folks, we think,
And a more economical beverage to drink.
"Tis Better Than Coffee," your family to serve;
No Caffeine; No Theine; its health to unnerve.
"Tis Better Than Coffee," so many folks say.
No insomnia by night; no headache by day:
No heart palpitation; no dread constipation:
No nervous prostration: no Doctor to pay.
Two cups in the morning and again two at night,
Just keep you a feeling—fresh, healthy and bright.

You brew it the same as you do your coff-ee,
Only cook it much longer—its cereal, you see.
A third of an hour after it comes to a boil,
Or longer, won't hurt it, if you're busy with toil.
A tablespoonful, to a cup, is the measure,
And one for the pot, if strength is your pleasure.
Should You have any over, don't throw it away.
For tomorrow 'twill taste just as good as today.
So a good double portion for supper you brew,
And re-heat in the morning, when minutes are few.

Three pounds for a dollar is the price you will pay
For something that's better than Coffee or Tay.
'Till your grocer has stocked it, you may get your supply,
Direct from the source where the wholesalers buy.
You send us a dollar, with name and address,
And three pounds we ship you; by parcel post? Yes.
So before you forget, just tear off and sign
The order blank following this effort of mine.
Then, after you've tried it, and found it all right,
You may wish to endorse it, in rhyme, that is right.

Rush On Tickets For B. M. Drawing

Payments on Accounts and Purchases Result in Big Run on Ford Tickets.

A last minute rush is being evidenced by the members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association as hundreds of tickets are being given out with their sales and payments on accounts during the week preceding the presentation of the new Ford Tudor sedan.

The car will be given away next Friday night, Feb. 1, at 7:30 on the vacant lot next to the Hilltop Bank.

A committee of disinterested persons is being selected to act as umpires of the ceremonies. The car will be on the grounds the night of the presentation and may be driven away if the winning number is presented.

Several alternate numbers will be drawn and if the car is not claimed Friday night the winning number and the alternates will be posted in the business houses of all those members who are participating in the contest on Saturday.

The car is now on display at Voss Bros., local Ford dealers. The winner of this car will be entitled to all the special servicing of the usual Ford buyer.

Business men at their last meeting expressed much satisfaction with the interest in the gift of this car to some one who shops on the Hilltop.

Lumber Studio To Open Today

West Side Lumber Co. Issues Invitation to Visit New "Doddington House."

"The Doddington House," soon to take its place as a studio in a field of its own, will be formally opened to the public today.

The house, located next to the main office of the Doddington Co., on West Broad street near the N. & W. tracks, has every room finished in a different kind of wood and in different designs. The purpose of the building is to give the public an idea of the many ways wood may be used about the home and offer ideas in planning new houses.

One of the outstanding features is the built in McDougal kitchen unit of which the Doddington Co. are distributors. The breakfast room is finished in painted insulite.

Of especial interest is the dining room finished in knotty pine with its old-fash oned plank floor and hand carvings over the doors and futuristic lighting fixtures which were made special for the house.

Living room is finished in black walnut with a carved stair case leading out from it and built in book cases.

Aside from the wide hallway is a small lounging room with built-in bed. The hall has a built-in mirror. Closet spaces are abundant throughout the house.

The bath, on the first floor, is floored with teakwood.

The wallpaper in the upstairs hall was imported from Germany. Two rooms upstairs are finished in Celotex and Insulite to show how spare rooms may be utilized at little cost.

The West Side Lumber Co., a branch of the Doddington Co., is issuing an invitation to the people of the Hilltop to visit the house. The Doddington Co. has five branches and has been in business for 40 years.

Here our happiest times we did all once spend,
We leave you, but 'tis with a sigh—
Farewell West High, West High!

We shall never forget, tho we're far away,
Old pal of our school days,
How you stood for all our childish pranks
And helped us many ways.
We love you'll yet and always will Tho now West High is upon the hill.
'Tis growing late we must say
"Goodbye"—
Farewell West High, West High!

HOW I MAKE

By Readers of the Hilltop Record

CAULIFLOWER AND CHEESE

One medium sized head cauliflower, 1 cup milk, 1 cup water, 1 teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons butter, 1½ tablespoons flour, 2 eggs, ½ cup dried bread crumbs, ½ cup grated cheese, 1 teaspoon paprika.

Trim cauliflower and divide into flowerets. Let stand in cold salted water for one hour. Drain and cook in milk and water seasoned with salt for 20 minutes. Drain cauliflower from liquid. Rub butter and flour together until smooth and stir into milk and water in which cauliflower was cooked and bring mixture to the boiling point, stirring constantly. Beat eggs and dip each sprig of cauliflower into eggs and then into crumbs and cheese thoroly mixed. Arrange in casserole and add any left-over beaten egg to hot sauce. Pour sauce over cauliflower in casserole and bake 15 minutes in a hot oven.

Serve from casserole.

NEW PONTIAC BIG SIX PLACED ON DISPLAY

Many Improvements Listed—New Body Creations by Fisher.

Fulfilling advance promises of big car performance, big car appearance and big car value, the Pontiac Big Six, essentially a brand new car from radiator to tail lamp, is now on display at the showrooms of West Side Motors, Inc., local Oakland and Pontiac dealers.

Chassis improvements that give the car flexible performance comparable with cars in a higher price range with bodies styled along entirely different lines, distinguish every model in this newest General Motors line.

Outstanding features contributing to the extraordinary performance of the new car are a larger and more powerful engine; new counter-weighted crankshaft; new harmonic balancer; new internal self-energizing brakes; new rear axle; new transmission; larger carburetor, intake manifold and valves; wider springs with new shackles self-adjusting for wear; increased valve lift, and new Hotchkiss drive.

Striking new body creations by Fisher impart to the entire line individuality and custom-like features entirely new in the Pontiac price class. From the gleaming high radiator shell to the graceful molded rear panel, harmonious lines and brilliant chrome finished exterior hardware radiate smartness, distinction and individuality.

Larger fenders, full crowned and with a beaded edge, flare out in a graceful sweep over the smart low wheels.

A slender and brilliantly finished cowl band with parking lamps adds to the exterior beauty of appearance.

All closed bodies have adjustable drivers seats, smart new sun visor, slender ebony finish 17-inch steering wheel, ebony finish instrument panel illuminated by two hooded bulbs, Delco-Remy combination transmission and ignition lock on dash, depressible beam headlamps operated by foot control, new approved combination tail light, stop light, and license support, larger Delco-Remy motor driven horn, automatic windshield cleaner, rear view mirror, theft-proof door locks and exclusively designed running board mats.

Upholstery material in the closed models is of mohair, corduroy or velour in solid colors. Open types are upholstered in Spanish leather trimmed in Fabrikoid, with tops of grey cloth-teal.

Massive ten-spoke artillery wheels with large hubs and flanges and 29 by 5.00 straight side balloon tires are standard on all models.

Perfect Teeth Rare

During the past twelve years nearly twenty thousand home office employees of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company have received dental examination s. Only two sets of perfect teeth have ever been found. "A perfect set of teeth is among the rarest of natural phenomena." Dr. T. P. Hyatt, who has made a systematic study of dental conditions for the company, calls attention to the fact that the decay of teeth is not a matter of chance. "Certain teeth, and certain particular surfaces of these teeth, are far more susceptible than others. The significant fact is that the surfaces found to be especially subject to decay are the surfaces which are known to dentists to have naturally weak points in their enamel-pits and fissures that exist from the time the tooth is formed. It is in these natural crevices that bacteria find an ideal breeding place and produce dental decay.

THE NEW WEST HIGH OPENS

The second semester of school will open Monday with West High occupying its new home on the Hilltop. We join with all the Hilltop in wishing success to the institution and hope to see much progress in every respect.

The new building is ideally located and is without doubt a beauty spot that is hard to equal. It is modern throughout. Nothing has been spared to make it complete in every detail. Here is a seat of opportunity.

Students and faculty members should feel proud of this fine building and strive to make it a place of service to the community. Unless the proper attitude is taken by student and teacher the money that has been used in building this school might be considered a loss.

This matter of education has reached the point where it is entirely different from the system of readin', 'ritin' and 'rithmetic of a few years back. Untold fields of knowledge have been opened up and it is the duty of the teaching force of such an institution to make things harmonize in such a way that the utmost benefit is given to the student.

Their presence in this new building should only serve to make the faculty of West High and Highland Junior High to realize all the more that modern methods of efficiency are to be employed. The parents of the students should be able to see the results of the teachers' endeavors. In general the student is a reflection of the ability and interest of the teaching staff.

We take this opportunity to congratulate Mr. Magly, principal of West, and Mr. Reighley, principal of Highland, and wish them success in their new home.

DESERVING OF RECOGNITION

Several months ago the Record carried a story of a Hilltop Boy Scout who saved the lives of two women in Buckeye Lake. At the time we stated that the boy was deserving of a national honor.

Recently the national scout court of honor awarded a gold medal to the boy, Joseph Erlenwein.

Here is a story of unusual interest that brings out the fine qualities of the Boy Scout organization. Until the boy joined the scout troop he was unable to swim. When it came time for him to apply for his merit badge for swimming he was unsuccessful many times. Finally after two years of training he learned to swim. Full credit for it is given to the Boy Scout organization by the boy.

Such an act on the part of the youth speaks well for the Boy Scouts and should encourage other boys to join.

This new Ford the business men are giving away means that there will be just one more car the pedestrian must dodge.

The Spectator

"The news is not too sensational for the reading public."

The Quality of the Press

Just what should the newspapers try to give the American public in their printed pages from day to day? Probably this question never disturbs the average reader but often it is a problem for the publisher.

A friend, knowing my interest in journalism, points out the faults of the present-day newspaper by saying they are too sensational, are untruthful, misrepresent the facts, and do not give the people the better things that they should be reading. Says he, the public gets nothing from the bold faced type that tells the story of a recent murder or crime wave.

In the first place this friend has the wrong idea of the purpose of the newspaper. It does not exist purely to educate the people to the value of all that is fine and correct. Instead it is printed in order to let the world know what is going on. The technical journals and periodicals are for the purpose of presenting the things he has in mind. The nearest a newspaper can come to this is in its interpretation of the news found in the editorial columns.

Further Rebuttals

As for being untruthful, the newspapers, like all other business enterprizes make some mistakes, but even so they are relatively small in comparison with the number of other businesses. The difference lies in the fact that the public sees the newspaper mistake in type.

Competition in the news gathering field is so keen today that a good newspaper cannot afford to misrepresent. If they do it means a black eye when a rival paper prints the truth, which it is sure to do.

As for sensationalizing, this is what the public wants. Another better purpose for it is that the public is awakened to what is going on about them when they see the stories of the horribleness of war or crime or the unreasonableness of the graft that goes on in public offices. This is as it should be.

The Names You See in Print

News! What would it be without names? And names! What do they mean if you aren't acquainted with them?

Daily reading of the newspapers will help a person to learn more of world affairs and make more acquaintances than is possible in any other way.

If it wasn't for the newspapers we could not become so intimately acquainted with the new football coach of Ohio State university or for that matter the man who was last week at the point of defeat on the Senate floor for lack of words, Senator Borak.

Proper names will run a good race with the most common articles and adjectives in our newspaper language. At the recent inauguration the one word "Cooper" was dominant throughout over one half of a full page of news stories.

Tons of Type

Further proof that names occupy a great part of the news is found in the fact that since the conventions in June the word "Hoover" has been set in type millions of times. Figuring each slug that contained his name to weigh on an average of three ounces there would have been over a million pounds of metal used for this purpose, in the country over a period of six months.

Names are merely the human element that make up news and at an instance we recall events of importance at the mention of the Indian chief, Geronimo, Calvin Coolidge, Seuntor Kellogg, Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick, Raymond Poincaire, George V., Duke Nicholas and Roy Riegels, all of whom have had their word stories on the nation's front pages during the past two weeks.

The Slippery Eel

An aspect of the slipperyness of the eel that very few people are acquainted with is its ability to travel great distances.

To most of us the eel has always been just a common little snake-like animal, or fish as some of us might have called it, that was of little importance and very hard to hold in the hand because of its slippery skin.

But this little animal holds a new position in our thought when we stop to consider its habits or rather we should say the one particularly outstanding feature of its spawning. For it is the eel that travels from all parts of the Atlantic basin to one spot near Cuba to spawn.

They travel from the far shores of western Europe to the southeastern coast of this continent. Hundreds of them gather in this one place resembling a political convention as they assemble.

Easiest to Learn At Age of 21

Professor Thorndyke, of Columbia university, says that it is easier for a man of forty-two to learn than for a boy of fifteen. He places the high point of receptivity at the age of twenty-one. After that it decreases so slowly that for a number of years the capacity to learn must remain very near the peak. He estimates that the decline is at the rate of one per cent a year.

Who Is Not Willing To Pay A Fair Rate For Gas Service?

"We want to pay what is right for gas."

"The company is entitled to a better rate."

"Columbus should pay a competing price for Gas."

"The company deserves a higher rate."

These are expressions taken from letters written by Columbus gas customers. Even those who wrote to complain about some error of service gave expression to friendliness and usually admitted "Gas is worth more."

Human nature generally wants justice done and the square deal made a reality.

Many have said they have inquired as to gas rates in other cities and in every instance such inquiry developed the fact that gas rates could be advanced all that the company has ever asked and still be low here.

There is a widely expressed opinion that the company is asking only what it is entitled to by way of revenue to cover actual costs and just such a margin of return as has been recognized as reasonable by all regulatory authorities and sustained by the highest courts.

In fact, a leading representative citizen wrote: "I think the city would be fortunate to get the rates proposed by the company for a term of years."

The present rate was based upon consideration of evidence relative to conditions prior to August, 1925.

It had to do with provisions of a rate ordinance passed in 1924. This ordinance and rate expire by limitation in August of this year.

Radical changes are recognized on every hand during five years.

Isn't it fair to concede that the same changes have occurred in the gas business?

As a matter of fact, the gas companies have spent several millions of dollars in improving and adding to service facilities. Such additional investments deserve consideration from the standpoint of revenue.

They were demanded by the gas consumers of the city. They represent essential development of plant to take care of the city's growth.

In all of the discussions with reference to rates with public officials, there has been no question raised as to the value of gas. It isn't, "What is gas worth?"

The worth of gas is recognized and conceded by all. No one has said they would do without using it at a higher price.

The whole proposition has been simply a case of treating rates or prices negatively. It has been an attitude of "we don't want to pay more for gas and therefore we won't pay more."

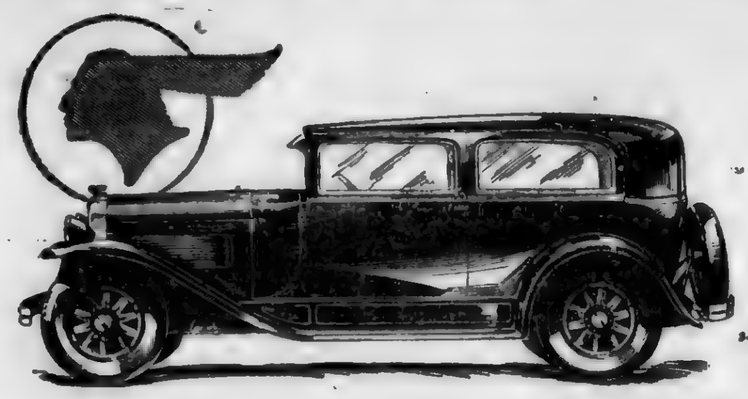
This manner of thinking would long, long ago have ruined the whole industrial and wage structure had it been followed in those fields.

Of course, no one wants to pay more for anything. But everyone recognizes the economic factors that made "paying more" not only acceptable but beneficial to all.

The gas company has not enjoyed asking its customers to pay more, but the necessities of the business have forced the issue, and those from whom we have heard acknowledge an advance in gas rates is justified.

Then, why shouldn't this whole matter be immediately settled?

Time goes on and conditions grow worse even while negotiations are pending.



Can we have immediate action? Will you let us have your active support in this matter in addition to your written endorsements?

2-Door Sedan, $745
Body by Fisher

announcing The New PONTIAC BIG SIX

Introducing Big Car Standards of Luxury, Style and Performance at $745

TODAY a new type of low cost motoring luxury is available. It embraces big car style. It provides big car riding comfort. It embodies big car quality in unseen parts. It is offered by a brand new automobile—the New Pontiac Big Six.

Frankly, the New Pontiac Big Six was designed to appeal to a certain group. This group is made up of people who are beginning to move up in the world. Many of them will soon make the first step up in the quality of their cars. The New Pontiac Big Six was designed for them.

It comes to them entirely new in appearance. Stunning new bodies by Fisher contribute to the big car beauty and big car style presented by the car as a whole.

Progressive people are seeking greater luxury. The Pontiac Big Six offers them the luxury for which bodies by Fisher are famous the world over. It provides the smooth-riding qualities of a car 167 inches in overall length, with accurately balanced rotating mechanical parts and such advanced comfort features as adjustable drivers' seats.

It is a six with the added power of a larger L-head engine and the added smoothness imparted by a dynamically balanced, counter-weighted crankshaft and the famous Harmonic Balancer. Its new brakes are of the dirt-and-weather-proof internal four-wheel type.

It reveals big car performance even to the point of developing big car power and big car speed.

Only a few highlights in its construction have been mentioned. Just enough to prove that the Pontiac Big Six is entirely new and capable of meeting progressive Americans' demand. But the amazing thing about it is that it gives so much big car luxury, style and performance at prices which come within practically everyone's reach!

Prices $745 and up, f.o.b. factory, plus delivery charges. Bumpers and rear fender guards regular equipment at slight extra cost. Check Oakland-Pontiac delivered prices—they include lowest handling charges. General Motors Time Payment Plan available at minimum rate.

Pride and Penitence
By MARCELLA S. CARLSTON

Another person, who had never been frequently seen in places of amusement, was now sitting where she could watch an act more interesting than the one on the stage. She smiled wisely to herself as she watched Kathryn smiling into the face of "Lord Ingleson." Mrs. Hunter also watched Gertrude Matthews, and partly surmised what was passing through the girl's mind.

"Mary, as usual, has chosen a peculiar way of accomplishing her point," the woman thought. "But her scheme has certainly taken root."

A short time later, when the crowd began to pour from the building, Paul Randall stopped for a few moments to speak to Mrs. Hunter.

"How's Mary?" he asked.

"All right," the woman replied shortly.

"When will she be home?"

"I do not know exactly," she said. "Do you suppose she would like to see an old friend like me when she returns?" he asked, impulsively.

"That is for her to decide. So far as I am concerned, you will always be welcome in my home," the woman said, relenting a little.

"Thank you, Mrs. Hunter. I must be moving on, as my companion is waiting."

Gertrude had seized the opportunity offered when Paul stopped to talk to Mary's mother. Disregarding the rules of etiquette, she hastened away from her escort in an effort to find Lord Ingleson. Presently his hat caught her eye, and elbowing her way through the crowd, she was soon standing by his side, indirectly flattering him, and making a bid for his attentions.

"Where is Paul?" Kathryn asked, impatiently.

"Back there, some place, talking to the village washerwoman, the mother of that horrid Mary Hunter." Gertrude's reply was made in an effort to make the Randall family seem quite common in the eyes of Lord Ingleson, whom she felt certain would not approve of Paul condescending to even notice anyone so common, in a public place, especially.

The three stood in front of the theater, as it was raining hard, and only a few had ventured to leave the shelter now provided for them.

"'Ow deplorable!" Lord Ingleson exclaimed, swinging his cane impatiently. "This weather we are 'aving is hawful."

Paul noticed that Gertrude was swiftly transferring her affections (such as she was capable of possessing) to Lord Ingleson, a fact which in one sense relieved his mind, but in another, piqued his vanity. Being of the opinion that Lord Ingleson was either a fortune hunter or a person hiding from the law, Paul preferred that Miss Matthews be the victim of any scheme the man might have had in mind, instead of his sister, Kathryn.

After his brief conversation with Mrs. Hunter, he went in search of Gertrude, and found her and his sister indirectly insulting one another, and both making efforts to impress Lord Ingleson.

"Good h-evening, Lord Ingleson," he said, in a slightly mocking tone.

A cold nod was all that he received in reply. Nothing daunted, however, Paul made a suggestion.

"If your lordship will permit, due to the lateness of the hour and the inclemency of the weather, I will see that my sister reaches home safely, which leaves only Miss Matthews in your care."

Kathryn scowled, Gertrude beamed, Lord Ingleson had little difficulty in being indifferent, and Paul wondered if he would ever live down Kathryn's opinion of him, and was convinced that he probably would not, before he and his sister arrived at their destination.

"I do not see why you are continually interferring with my affairs," she said angrily, as soon as they were out of hearing distance of the others.

"For your own good, sister. I am positive that that man's name is not Ingleson any more than mine is, and I bet it would take him an hour to find England on the map."

"Oh, shut up, grandpa! You're just jealous because Gertrude likes Lord Ingleson better than she does you; but don't let your hair turn grey worrying about that, as Lord Ingleson is mine, all mine. Gertrude is wasting her time. He told me last night that he considered her quite common. Other remarks he made about her were not flattering either."

"He is probably making similar ones about you at this moment. Trying to learn whose papa has the most money before he drops one or the other of you. Can't you see through him?"

"Yes, I can; and I am sure that he notices Gertrude, only when she forces herself upon him, or when some fool like you thrusts her in his path."

"Now, Katy—"

"My name is not Katy."

"Isn't it, Katy?"

"Shut up!"

"All right. But remember I have done my duty. You can never say that I did not advise you. Mother seems to be as much taken in by this fake nobleman as you are, but I am sure that if you were to ask dad, he would think as I do about the matter."

In the meantime, Gertrude was making the most of her time with Lord Ingleson.

"You really should have accompanied Kathryn home," she said. "She will never forgive either her brother or me for this."

"In England, we would consider it decidedly impeoper, but you Americans do things in the most convenient manner, for which I am truly thankful in this case," Lord Ingleson said, with a touch of flattery in his voice.

Gertrude was throly pleased.

"Don't you find Kathryn quite interesting?" she inquired testily.

"Well, yes, rawther; but not nearly so much as you, Miss Matthews, or Gertrude. May I call you that?"

"Certainly, Lord Ingleson."

Schools Shift to New Homes in Confusion

Six Schools Affected by Moves But Are Now on Full Time Schedules.

Six Hilltop schools were in some degree confused early this week when students were shifted and moved about to make up their headquarters in new buildings.

Changes included moving of West High to the new building on Powell avenue, moving of Highland Junior High from the Highland Avenue school to the new West building, shifting of students at West Broad, John Burroughs and Highland, and moving of Starling Junior high from Central to the old West building.

Enrollment at West High was 700 on Tuesday afternoon with about 950 enrolled in the new West Junior High, formerly Highland Junior High. All classes went on full time Tuesday.

Books and equipment of the two schools have not been arranged yet due to the installation of the cabinets in the offices. They will be installed soon and other rooms are also being cleaned for use by the classes.

At West Broad there were 883 students enrolled Tuesday, 32 of which were in their wrong districts and will probably be shifted to other schools.

Highland Avenue, now all elementary school, had 661 enrolled with 38 more due. E. N. Littleton, former assistant principal at Highland, was retained in the move, as principal at Highland elementary. The school is now a combination of the former Highland elementary, Dana John Burroughs and West Broad.

Members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association are favoring a traffic light at Highland avenue for protection to the children at that school.

Starling Junior High, located in the old West building on Central avenue, was probably most disturbed Tuesday and were planning but half-time classes through Wednesday. The school has 35 teachers and near 1000 students. They come from the Hilltop from Woodbury avenue and the west fence of the Institution for Feeble Minded to Sandusky street for most students and to the Scioto river for manuel arts students. H. W. Emsweiller is principal at Starling.

This is the third move for Starling. The school was originally at Avondale, then moved to Central and now to their present location.

The enrollment figures were not available at John Burroughs.

Chalk Up Another

Another contributor to the old coin stories during the past week is Mrs. Richard Case, 146 S. Warren Ave., who sends in drawings of some of her collection.

Included in the list is a dollar dated 1836 and one cent pieces dated 1805, 1825, 1844, 1850 and 1855.

WESTGATE PARK PROMISED POOL

Necessary appropriation of $1200 has been approved by city council for a wading pool for Westgate Park according to A. W. Raymond, city recreation director. Work will probably begin in the spring.

It will be a standard size concrete pool 40 feet in circumference and ten inches deep and will be located south of the tennis courts.

Deaths

Berndt of Wooster; Mrs. William F. Scharenberg, 166 Westgate Ave.; Mrs. A. G. Frank, 325 S. Harris Ave., and Mrs. E. S. Brentlinger, at home; a sister and three brothers. Funeral was held at 2 p. m. Monday at the home with interment in Memorial Burial Park by C. J. Kohn.

J. M. Breteswald, aged 73, formerly of Logan, who died at the Mitchell Rest home, 67 Midland Ave., of the infirmities of age, was interred in the Catholic cemetery in Logan Monday.

Earl Baston Kirk, 6, died Monday of meningitis at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ballard Kirk, 261 S. Harris Ave. He is survived by a brother Warren. Funeral services were held at 3 p. m. Tuesday at the residence. Burial in Memorial Burial Park by C. J. Kohn.

Grandview Takes First Game in New W. Gym

The first game in the new West High gym resulted in a defeat for the West High Cavaliers Tuesday evening by a score of 21 to 9 at the hands of the Grandview High boys. About 600 fans witnessed the game.

For the first few minutes of the game it appeared that the West play ers were destined to get the long end of the score but Grandview soon hit its pace and remained the leader throughout the game.

In the first half only 11 points were made, Grandview claiming seven of them.

In the second half the Grandview boys opened up and completely overwhelmed the Cavaliers.

ENGLISH KING IS STAMP COLLECTOR

King George of England is an ardent stamp collector. A special room, called the Stamp Room, leading from his study, contains the unusual and valuable collection of the British monarch. An interesting feature of the collection is that it consists entirely of stamps of the British Empire. The rarest stamps in the possession of the king are the post-office stamps of Mauritius, of 1847, bearing the head of Queen Victoria, which are among the rarest stamps in the world.

Store Expands

Kerr's Furniture Co., 619-635 W. Broad St., announce that they are now occupying the room immediately east of their present location for a trade in store, formerly in their basement. Their store is now 15 times as large as it was when they started 32 years ago.

Gay Party Delights Old West High Grads Midst Last Farewells

Friday night was a time of last adieus for old West High school as about 500 graduates and under graduates met at the building for a farewell party sponsored by the Alumni Association as a concluding step in their membership drive.

Representatives from every class since 1911 were present. Frank Marsh, one of the members of the class of '11, drove 60 miles to be present.

Gifts of remembrance were presented to Otto H. Magly, principal; Miss Olive Flowers, teacher, and C. L. Leahy, former coach.

Welcoming was in charge of Miles "Cap" Hoover, alumni president, and Robert John, senior class president.

Entertainment included an indoor track meet, dancing and novelty acts.

Pioneer Hilltop Resident to Observe 96th Birthday Anniversary Today

James Fippin, probably the oldest resident of the Hilltop will celebrate his 96th birthday at the home of his daughter Mrs. Mary Sperry, 45 S. Harris Ave., where he makes his home.

Due to his failing health Mr. Fippin will not be able to have his many friends about him today. He has been confined to his bed since January 2.

One of the features of his birthday will be a card shower planned by the Hilltop Lodge of Odd Fellows of which he is a member. He has been a member for 46 years, joining at Rome. He also attended Galloway Lodge and until recently has been a regular attendant at the Hilltop Lodge.

Mr. Fippin was born in Belmont county of pioneer parents in 1833 and shortly thereafter moved to Holmes county where he received his early education. Following his marriage he came to Camp Chase and after a short time left for Indiana. After a year in the Hoosier state he returned to Camp Chase and has lived in this vicinity ever since.

Here he built his first log cabin. Later he tore all of it down with the exception of one room and built a frame house about it. He later built a brick house which was destroyed by fire. Then he built a frame house which is standing today on the farm beyond the Big Four R. R. near the Little Miami R. R.

During the Civil War Mr. Fippin was a frequent visitor at Camp Chase and recalls that he cut more than 2000 cords of firewood for the camp in the heavily forested district that now makes up a part of the Hilltop.

He also recalls that during the war he was compelled to hide his pigs at night under the flooring of his barn to keep raiding Union soldiers from stealing them. He was familiar with the Union officers and noticed that the Confederate prisoners could never complain of ill treatment.

He has been a Republican all his life, joining it when it was first formed. He voted for Fremont and Abraham Lincoln for president and knew McKinley personally, when he was governor. He also voted for Hoover in the recent election.

He has four children living. Besides Mrs. Sperry, they are John and Samual Fippin of Columbus and Charles Fippin of Cortland, Trumbell county.

Weekly News Paper Issued for Blind

A magazine called the Weekly News is being published each week in Boston. The pages of this magazine would be meaningless to a seeing person, for it is written in Braille. But to the blind it opens a new world. Mr. Francis B. Ierardi, filed worker for Massachusetts Division of the Blind, himself able to see nothing of the world, conceived the idea. It is he who does most of the writing for the magazine, which he publishes with the help of a staff of ten, half of them blind. Financed privately, the Weekly News is sent free to its 650 subscribers. The hope of the editor is that the magazine may become "a national weekly in every sense of the word."

More Truth Than Fiction

Last week a business man advertised in the Record want ads for a cashier. Just after the paper was out calls began coming in. By evening 15 had made telephone calls and 17 had submitted letters addressed to the box.

In the same issue of the Record a lady advertised a baby crib, and high chairs. Her telephone was busy thereafter.

Seventy-two hundred families receive the Record and read the want ads. Here is an opportunity to make use of a good medium to sell your old furniture, rent a house, secure help, etc. Ads are received until 9 o'clock Wednesday mornings at the office and 8 o'clock at the stations.

PROTECT THE SCHOOL CHILDREN

Recent redistricting of the Hilltop schools, occasioned by opening of the new West High building, has brought about conditions altogether unlooked for, especially at Highland Avenue school.

Whereas the great majority of students at this school were in the teen age under the old regime, now small children from kindergarten age up to the time they enter Junior High attend this school. Many of these small children are from the district north of Broad street and are compelled to cross Broad street to reach the school. No facilities have been provided for the safety of these children in crossing one of the heaviest traveled streets in the city. This is a serious situation that should be remedied at once. It is criminal negligence to have such a condititon existing.

VITAL WASTE

Uncle Sam is now so high in efficiency that he is planning to make money out of the tiny holes which surround the ordinary postage stamp. That is to say, he is going to sell as waste the little paper disks which are punched out of the stamp sheets by the perforating machine. Since the Civil War this waste has gone into the trash barrel. It is estimated that the government will have twelve thousand pounds of such waste each month and for the first time is advertising for bids.

Elimination of waste in government is a crying need, and we welcome such news. Wasted hours, energy, and opportunities go into the discard daily without much notice in the press. But the loss is too individual and too vital for us to overlook it.

TRY THIS WHEN CONFUSED

Confusion in moral and religious matters often makes the life of a young person miserable, despite the blase front that he may put on. What is he to do?

The president of Rutgers must have been in sympathy with morally distracted youth when he gave the following excellent advice: "Regulate your life by the standards you admire when you are at your best." Such a standard is to youth what the North Star is to the mariner; it keeps him out of danger and it assists him in gaining his destination.

After all there is some reason to believe in evolution. Its great drawback is that there are too many specimens that apparently haven't evoluted yet.

". . . a new kind of Democracy . . . Democracy in Death."

Democracy in Death

A small town in Germany is taking the lead in democracy in another field. This nation that was the cause of the cry of democracy being heralded to the skies in the recent great war has since that time given the world something to think about in a new kind of democracy . . . democracy in death.

Perhaps this subject is better approached by calling attention to what is known in this country as the high cost of dying.

In this particular town we have reference to there is but one price for all burials. Whether a man be rich or poor his last resting place and his raiment when laid away is the same as that of his neighbor.

A look into the sensibleness of this method will be enough to convince us of the worthiness of the movement that may be set in motion by the Germans.

What It Costs to Die

Few of us have ever stopped to think of the amount of money a family must put out in order to bury its dead. Neither do we stop to bargain with the undertaker, now known as mortician, over the price of a casket, as we would over the price of a ton of coal or a loaf of bread.

The reason for this neglect of bargaining lies in the fact that consideration of the article has not been taken before the time it is actually needed and in such a distressing moment the average person is thinking only of the one thing . . . that this dead relative must be given a decent burial. This latter, in the undertaker's way of thinking is the best he thinks the person can buy.

The blame can hardly be laid at the foot of the mortician. Rather we would say it is better to have a little advance dealing and bargaining or at least a little better consideration of the matter after the death takes place.

The Why of It

An example of such a case is a better way of explanation than can be given otherwise. For this purpose we take a family of man, wife and two small children.

The couple have been married for but a few years. They are struggling along on the best wage the husband can make, considering that he lacks the years of experience that a higher wage calls for. Out of this amount he pays a small part for insurance. It is but a small policy, but all that they can stand at the present time. It may call for about $1000 in case of death.

Then a tragedy occurs and the husband is killed. The insurance company forwards a check for the small amount. Devotion of the wife to the young husband calls forth all her sympathy at the time of her bereavement and the husband is "well laid away." For this the undertaker is given his fees from the insurance check, leaving but a small amount for the widow and two small children.

An Attitude We Have

The government is regulating many things in our every day life these days and properly so in a great many cases. A move is on foot to regulate the fees charged by physicians in order to help the great middle class (the rich being able to pay and the poor getting the benefit of the clinics). The government regulates our railroad rates and inspects our meats and foods. It appears that they have an interest in the individual.

This being true what could be more appropriate than to have a part in the rates set by those who have the last business deal on earth in which we are concerned, the undertaker.

Our attitude toward what constitutes the proper burial for a person will make the experiment tried in Germany impossible here for some time. But who is there that will stand up and tell us the plan is not one that should have consideration?

Girls in Pharmacy

Girls make up more than one third of the classes in pharmacy at the University of Paris. According to the dean, the girls are even more industrious than the men. They do well in their examinations and carry off a fair share of the prizes. Prejudice against women as druggists was broken down during the World War, when many wives had to step into their husbands' places.

Pride and Penitence

By MARCELLA E. CARLSTON

family congratulated themselves upon the possible advent of a nobleman into their family. Mr. Matthews at once placed Paul in the background of the plans for his daughter's future welfare. Every time Lord Ingleson took his departure from either the Randall home or the Matthews home, the act was marked with a tender hand clasp or a slight embrace. In both cases, Lord Ingleson seemed to become just a little more bold each time, until both girls almost believed that, outside of their desire for marrying a title, they were really falling in love. Each believed that the other had made little or no progress with the object of their affections.

Before Lord Ingleson had come into their lives, the two girls had been the best of friends, hoping some day to be sisters by marriage. That idea had been given up by Gertrude, and Kathryn had lost all desire to have the other girl in the family. Both of the girls were objects of gossip over back yard fences, at social gatherings, and on the street corners.

Their means of salutation was reduced to a mere nod and finally the formality was dropped entirely.

CHAPTER VIII

It was evening of a sultry August day. Mary Hunter was alone in the room which she occupied in the village hotel. The clothes worn by "Lord Ingleson" had been thrown carelessly over a chair while the person who had been wearing them was indulging a few moments of freedom.

"Believe I will run over to see mother," she decided. "Suppose I'll have to masquerade again, or the papers will be full of scandal about Mary Hunter being seen leaving the room occupied by Lord Ingleson in the Park Hotel. I'm tired of this game though it has been interesting. I think I have permanently separated Paul and Gertrude, but I have not humiliated those girls quite enough, yet."

In less than a half an hour, Mary was on her way to the little house on the other side of the railroad tracks, disguised again as "Lord Ingleson."

Desiring to reach home as soon as possible, she decided to walk through a park that had recently been made in a wooded section of the country near her mother's home. As yet, the city had not placed a lighting system in the park, and one could travel here easily without being seen. Mary had only walked a short distance when a familiar voice reached her ears. The owner of it was Kathryn Randall.

"But I can't, Frank, I can't," she was saying.

"Why, dear?" a masculine voice questioned.

"I can never become accustomed to poverty. Lord Ingleson has asked me to marry him, and I promised to give him my answer tomorrow evening."

"To blazes with that faker. Can't you see that he is after your money, and that he is playing a double game which includes Gertrude Matthews. He wants to be sure of one of you."

"Oh, Frank, you're just as bad as Paul. Lord Ingleson is a gentleman, I tell you, and a chance to live in an English castle is not found every day."

"No, thank goodness, it is not. In this case, I am inclined to think that your 'English castle' would be a room in a cheap American hotel for a week."

"You couldn't even afford that," Kathryn snapped. "No Frank, I love you, but I can't marry you."

"You will marry me, if I have to waylay this Lord Ingleson and make him shed some of his blue blood."

The figure, bent to a listening attitude a few feet from the lovers, trembled.

"I didn't expect this to become so serious," Mary thought. "I'll try to avoid that young man."

"We'll meet here every night until time for my wedding," Kathryn suggested, and her companion agreed to the plan.

Mary slipped silently to the edge of the park and was soon walking down the road that led to her mother's home, being careful to keep in the shadows, as the villagers of Centerville must not see Lord Ingleson in that part of the town.

She entered the house by the rear entrance and after a brief visit with her mother, as it was quite late, she decided to return to the hotel.

"How soon do you intend to drop this silly disguise?" her mother questioned. "I think you have gone far enough."

"Within a very short time, mother dear. I am coming home again soon, and will be Mary Hunter for a day or two, just to see how I stand in this town after being away three years."

Pride and Penitence

"Lord Ingleson" was soon walking rapidly toward the central part of town. As he turned a corner rather abruptly, he unexpectedly found himself face to face with Frank Ormsby.

"You're just the bird I've been waiting to see on a lonely street some dark night. Now tell me this: what are your intentions toward my girl, Kathryn Randall? Looking for money, are you?"

"No, I'm not," Lord Ingleson replied, coolly. "Are you?"

The question infuriated young Ormsby, who doubled his fist, which he guided in the direction of Lord Ingleson's right eye; but to the youth's surprise, he found that his opponent was a better fighter than he had supposed. It would be hard to know what would have happened if the approach of the village policeman had not made it necessary to seek a hiding place.

CHAPTER IX

"I believe that is Mary Hunter." The words were spoken by Gertrude Matthews to her father who was accompanying the girl on a vacation trip. They were seated in the Centerville depot, and Gertrude was closely scrutinizing the girl who had just arrived on an in-bound train, whose appearance seemed to have improved greatly during the years of her absence from home. She greeted her mother tenderly, and Gertrude's lips formed the expression of a sneer at such public manifestations of affection.

as he had convinced Gertrude of his sincerity.

Mary and Mrs. Hunter entered the waiting room, as the girl had a good reason for knowing that Gertrude would be there. Hadn't she promised to meet Lord Ingleson in New York city at a certain date, when they were to be married and sail immediately for England? The agreement was to be kept a secret from the people living in Centerville, at Lord Ingleson's request.

Traffic Light Near Highland Asked by Board

Precautions Being Taken at School to Assist Children Across Street.

A resolution asking for a traffic light in West Broad street in the vicinity of Highland Elementary school, was passed by the city board of education Monday evening. The following resolution was presented by Cecil J. Randall, member of the board, and was unanimously approved.

Whereas a large number of children are compelled to cross from the north side of West Broad street, to attend Highland Avenue school and whereas there are no traffic lights at any convenient place on West Broad street to permit children to cross in safety, now therefore be it resolved by the Board of Education of the city of Columbus, Ohio, that the Director of Public safety be, and he is hereby requested to use all diligence possible in installing a traffic light or lights at some convenient place at or near Highland Avenue and West Broad street.

Wiring for a light at Oakley avenue in Broad street is up at present it is understood, but money for a light must be appropriated by council according to authorities of the mayor's office. The money appropriated in 1928 has all been used and no appropriation was made by council for 1929.

In the meantime the following precautions are being taken to safeguard the welfare of those children who must cross Broad street when going to the Highland Avenue school:

Janitors precede the children to the crossing each noon and afternoon at dismissal and help them to cross the street on their way home.

A patrol of boys in the sixth grade will be organized very soon to assist in this work.

Older pupils are asked to assist younger pupils in crossing both to and from school.

Four persons were killed in the city last month, while in 1928 there were nine traffic fatalities.

In Franklin county, outside of Columbus, four persons were killed, as compared with two deaths in the same month last year.

An increase in the number of persons injured in county and city traffic accidents is noted. Figures for last month are 127, compared with 92 for January, 1928.

No One Claims Ford Offered by Business Men

Over 1000 Brave Weather to Witness Presentation of Car Friday Night.

The Ford car offered by the Hilltop Business Men's Association in the recent nine weeks' advertising campaign has not been claimed and no alternate numbers for the car had been presented at the bank late Tuesday evening.

Over one thousand people braved the wintry weather Friday night to witness the presentation of the car. Former mayor George J. Karb presided, assisted by Robert Ostreicher of the South Side Civic Association.

Mr. Karb selected Helen Myers, 11, of 130 S. Eureka Ave., from the crowd to draw the numbers. Eleven numbers, corresponding to her age, were drawn and the eleventh was considered the winner. Ten more numbers were drawn as alternates.

All numbers drawn, winner or alternates should be presented at the Hilltop Bank to R. O. Harrison, manager. In case the winning number has not been presented by March 1 the car will be given to the next alternate number that has been filed.

The Numbers

The car will be presented to the holder of No. 48588A. Anyone holding the following numbers should also file them at the bank.

First Alternate	25787
Second Alternate	9316-B
Third Alternate	52837
Fourth Alternate	25109-B
Fifth Alternate	9317-B
Sixth Alternate	23807-A
Seventh Alternate	49861
Eighth Alternate	49326-A
Ninth Alternate	83578-B
Tenth Alternate	24931-A

The numbers have been in the stores of those who participated in the campaign since Saturday.

Veteran State Hospital Employes Have Records of Many Years Service

A source of much interest is the Columbus State Hospital, located on the Hilltop on the north side of Broad street and east of Wheatland avenue.

One of the particular things of interest is the fact that many of the employes have been there on duty for a great part of their lives.

First in the number of years of service is William T. Riddile, who began working for the state 47 years ago and second in rank is Winfield Scott, 121 Highland Ave., who has served 45 years.

Riddile began work under Governor Rutherford B. Hayes, Scott started under Governor William Allen. Both were then attendants or guards. But both are now supervisors.

Living was considered cheap in those days and is reflected in the salary of $25 per month paid to the employes. At this rate the above wage was considered good.

Classified lists of state employes did not exist then and no examinations were necessary for the position. The fact as to whether you happened to be a Republican or Democrat were the only matters of question.

Deserving of credit for years of service is Anna Laymon, nurse, who has nursed the mentally deficient for almost forty years.

Mathias Schatz, in charge of the farming activities has 30 years of service to his credit.

Dr. William H. Pritchard, superintendent, started working for the state October 1, 1901. Dr. Pritchard lives on the hospital grounds.

Other old timers at the institution that have been there for 20 years or more include M. T. Hines, chief clerk; Owen Cooney, supervisor; George W. Port, attendant; Anna Port, nurse; J. L. Harper, attendant; J. P. Jones, upholsterer; Elizabeth Master, seamstress, and Mary McCann, attendant.

Pride and Penitence

By MARCELLA S. CARLSTON

As Mary looked at Gertrude, she was at first inclined to regret that "Lord Ingleson" had gone so far, but when the girl's eyes met hers with a haughty stare, followed by other noticeable insults, Mary decided to allow her to take the proposed journey.

As she and her mother walked toward their humble place of abode on the opposite side of the railroad tracks, both noticed that Mary Hunter was not nearly so popular as Lord Ingleson, except in one instance. When they passed the building where Mr. Randall's offices were located, a young man stepped from the elevator and hastened through the front entrance. When his eyes met Mary's every misunderstanding that had ever existed between them seemed to have been swept away, and the important business which had demanded his attention was now forgotten when he looked into the eyes whose depths he had penetrated so many times back in the days of childhood and early manhood and womanhood.

"Glad to see me?" he asked.

"Of course, Paul. Why do you ask?"

"Well, we have been separated for a long time, you know; but never again," and the excited young man would have kissed her then and there if she hadn't stopped him.

"Wait until I get my car, and I'll drive you home," he suggested.

Within a short time, the three were comfortably seated in Paul's new roadster, and were ready to commence the short drive home when a high pitched feminine voice was heard. It was Kathryn.

"Running a taxi-line for charitable purposes, Paul?" she asked in her old haughty tone of voice.

"Don't worry about what I'm doing. There's Frank Ormsby looking for you," he said, to change the subject as quickly as possible.

"I'm not interested in Frank Ormsby, so you needn't mention his name to me."

"Then why do you meet him frequently in the park, when you thing no one is observing you?" Paul asked in a low tone, as his sister was standing on the side of the machine nearest to the drivers' seat.

"I do not meet him any place," she said, indignantly, making an attempt to deny the accusation.

"Yes, you do. I have followed you," Paul said.

"What right have you to follow me?" the girl demanded indignantly.

"The right of a brother," he replied. "I thought at first that you were meeting that fake Lord Ingleson. That was the reason I followed you."

"After this, allow me to attend to my own business. Lord Ingleson is a gentleman, and I intend to marry him."

"Probably you do; but I am not so sure that he expects to marry you," Paul replied, with particular emphasis on his pronouns.

"I'll show you," Kathryn said. "Everyone else approves of him, and I intend to marry him."

Paul did not reply, as he knew that his sister always had the last word.

"Someone disguised as an English nobleman came to this town several weeks ago," he explained to Mary. "Almost everyone seems to think that he is the genuine article, but I do not."

"What is the reason for your snobbishness?" Mary asked.

"I think he is a fortune hunter, myself, as the only girls to whom he has been attentive are my sister and Gertrude Matthews. The others have been beneath his notice."

"You may be mistaken, though, Paul," Mary said a trifle testily. "Kathryn and Gertrude are both very attractive girls, you know."

Paul smiled, as he knew the underlying meaning of Mary's remark.

"If he was looking for an attractive girl, he should have waited a while," Paul said, with a look of admiration at the girl beside him, which was not hard to interpret, and which changed the subject from Kathryn's affairs to something more personal. Even the presence of Mrs. Hunter was nearly forgotten.

When they reached their own neighborhood, however, after crossing the railroad tracks, they were forced to return the greetings of neighbors, who had gathered on their front porches to see again the girlish smile that had sometimes been the only ray of sunshine in their uneventful lives.

When they saw the blue and yellow roadster with its occupants coming down the street, the rumor that Mary had returned to Centerville as a bride was rapidly circulated, but was corrected later when Paul went away, alone.

"Gee!" Paul had exclaimed boyishly, when, after the evening meal, they were walking along the old familiar path that led to the little school house. "It seems good to have you home again. I missed you so much."

"But managed to find consolation in Gertrude Matthews' society," Mary added.

"I believe I did succeed in making you jealous," Paul said teasingly.

"Wasn't jealousy the thing that prompted you to turn from me because you saw that I was with Ray Warner?" Mary returned.

"Well, yes, I suppose so. But you didn't replied to my letters, and at that time, I did not know why you had failed to write to me."

"My aunt had good intentions, but it was hard for me to be appreciative of her assistance to me when I knew that she had deprived me of my favorite enjoyment."

Paul's arm tightened about her, and he began to form sentences aloud.

A LITTLE COURTESY

A little courtesy will go a long way during this weather. The snow and slush make automobile traffic especially dangerous and offers a chance for a little care on the part of the driver.

Instead of passing another car and splashing the dirty water from the car tracks against the sides of the car, or worse yet, a pedestrian, the driver should show some consideration and wait his turn.

Speeding should be held down also due to the fact that brakes are of but little use when the wheels strike an icy spot.

WHAT DISCOUNTS MEAN

Probably more business men and individuals would make an effort to increase their working capital if they realized how much they sacrifice through inability to discount their bills.

The National Association of Credit Men has compiled a table showing what may be earned by various discounts:

	Per Annum
½%—10 days—net 30 days equals	9%
1%—10 days—net 30 days equals	18%
1½%—10 days—net 30 days equals	27%
2%—30 days—net 4 mos. equals	8%
2%—10 days—net 60 days equals	14%
2%—30 days—net 60 days equals	24%
2%—10 days—net 30 days equals	36%
3%—10 days—net 4 mos. equals	10%
3%—30 days—net 60 days equals	36%
3%—10 days—net 30 days equals	54%

Perhaps the most usual discount offered is 2% for 10 days or 30 days net. The man who takes advantage of this discount earns 36% on his money.

Now that the Ford car has been given away the problem is to dispose of the old tickets and stubs. They should be of use in the furnace and help cut down the coal bill.

An optomist is a person who tries to sell his customers spring suits after he has just finished filling his radiator with alcohol. But then it is being done.

The new West high school must not be so outstanding after all. A new student applied at John Burroughs last week for admission, thinking that building to be the new high school.

We always did admire the fellow who came back after being defeated and so it goes with the person who finds himself slipping on the icy pavement.

One big advantage of the summer time is that wet feet don't have the same effect as in winter.

Tomorrow

Little Virginia, whose age is six,
Thinks Father Time is up to some tricks.
In her short life she has one sorrow,
Try how she may, she can't catch tomorrow.

This little maid with eyes of blue,
And a heart full of love, tender and true,
Awakes each morn, this thought in mind,
Today she will surely tomorrow find.

With eyes that twinkle, bright and merry,
She calls in a voice, quite sweet and cheery,
"Is this tomorrow?" and I must say,
As I answer her, "No, this is today."

Little one, tomorrow, is ever one day away,
Today is tomorrow of yesterday.
Live each today, noble and true,
The hope for tomorrow is hope anew.
—Ethel Titus Worthen, 370 N. Powell.

The Spectator

We like to hear our love-making and pie sunshing.

Love and the Radio

Just now over Collier's hour on the radio comes the epitath "Who so finds a wife finds a good thing." And along with it goes a love story as per usual.

The one time thought that the radio was for the purpose of replacing the phonograph in producing music is passe and its now used for many other things including transmitting love stories to make them more realistic which is for the benefit of the whole nation.

As long as there is a story of love attached the big show goes over and even in the radio program a story of such nature heads the list.

And Talkies Too

Furthermore the silent movie is going to take its place on the shelf and allow the audiences over the country to hear their love making as well as their pie smashing.

The public just must be satisfied and especially so in this business of love making. The romance that a person has imbedded in their souls must come out sooner or later and an enormous number are forced to give vent to their feelings by watching, listening and reading of love.

It Must Be Out

Angelo Patri has just now explained his thoughts concerning the rearing of children and has stated that the future of a child depends upon how it has been raised. Several members of the club at once challenge the statement and I take sides with Patri.

Environment has more to do with the child's future than has heredity. Parents of course contribute much to the welfare of the child but more in the way of health or physical weaknesses than in character. Character of course may be similar to that of the parents but if proper caution is taken and the child is submitted to the proper environment the odds are in favor of a normal adult person from the child.

The "devil" is in some children and must be out at some time, some people will say, but the truth stands that the "devil" has only been placed there by the wrong move in the development of the child.

Give Him a Chance

It has been called to our attention that a local school authority turned away a boy, well into his teens, because he, the boy, had previously been enrolled in another school.

Here is a case of a little extra consideration on the part of the school authority. The boy will perhaps stay out of school rather than go to the school he originally signed up for. It appears that some investigation of the character of the boy would have revealed enough to the satisfaction of the school head that he could have made an exception for once and given the boy a chance where he will be satisfied.

The Sandman Story

by Martha Martin

THE "MAMMA" DOLL

Witty Witch, a delightful old lady, sat in her great armchair.

There were children big
And children small.
There were children short
And children tall.
There were children
Of every shape and size
And children with blue, black,
Brown and green eyes.

This was the song Witty Witch sang to the Fairies and the Elves and the Brownies and the Gnomes who had come to call on her and to hear some of her stories.

Witty Witch had been delighted to see all her guests and she had many a story to tell them. She had been busy going around telling the truth about herself, for so often the truth was not told about her.

She wanted to let every one know how much she loved children and that she hoped they would love her. But now she was back home and it was a delightful surprise to have all of the Fairyland people coming to see her at once.

So she had been telling them stories as they dearly loved to hear Witty Witch's stories.

"But I haven't told the one about Pam's doll as yet," she said after she had finished singing the song about the children.

"Pam was one of the children with blue eyes. Blue eyes has Pam and rosy cheeks, too, and she is fat, but not too fat. She has nice chubby legs and her best party dress is blue.

"Well, Pam had been to a tea party at her grandmother's and grandfather's house and what a good time she had had.

"She had taken her doll to the party and her doll had said mamma and papa and had also walked, taking hold of Pam's hand.

"Pam was five, but the doll was only a year old, and so Pam had brought the doll's crib along for in likelihood the doll might become sleepy.

"Sure enough! The doll had become sleepy and so Pam had put her in the crib at one end of the room.

"After the tea party was all over Pam went home, for by that time it was Pam's bedtime and as the afternoon had been quite exciting she really was tired even though she could have sat up a little longer.

"She had pretended that she was the doll and when some of the tea party guests had pressed her little chest she had said, 'Mamma,' and 'Papa,' when they had pressed her back.

"And he had even said something when her right shoulder was pressed and when her left shoulder was pressed for she could do more than the doll could do.

"Well, the party was all over and every guest had gone. Pam's grandmother and grandfather began to put away the teacups and saucers so as to set the room to rights.

"Pam's grandfather said to Pam's grandmother, 'I will put the tea table over in the corner of the room, my dear. It is too heavy for you to carry.'

"Well, as Pam's grandfather put down the table in the corner of the room suddenly a voice cried out, 'Mamma, mamma!'

"Oh, how Pam's grandfather did jump! And Pam's grandmother said, 'What could it have been? Is there a baby outside? No, it sounded as though in this room. Oh, what could it have been?'

"Pam's grandfather moved the table to the position he had put it in just as he had jumped and as he did so once more came the cries, 'Mamma, mamma, mamma, mamma.'

"And then they knew! It was Pam's doll which had been left behind and she had awakened in her crib when the leg of the table had made her cry out her cry of 'Mamma.' What a laugh there was about it and the dolly hadn't been hurt so she didn't mind the laughter!"

Varied Weather Menu and Snowfall in Ohio

Ohio has had a varied and cold career in the way of weather. In the winter of 1908-09 only 3.2 inches of snow fell, the smallest snowfall on record. However, the next winter, not to be outdone, came through with the grand total of 67.8 inches. The largest amount of snow to fall within 24 hours occurred January 13, 1917, with 6 inches and 4 more inches on the following day greeted the population. On January 15 of this winter 4.2 inches fell.

The number of inches of snowfall during the past five winters has been varied. In the winter of 1923-24, 11.8 inches fell; in 1924-25, 18.8 inches; in 1925-26, 30.3 inches; in 1926-27, 13 inches; in 1927-28, 10.3 inches, and up to the present time this winter about 11 inches. And according to the weatherman, there are at least 5 more inches to come.

Early Scenes on Hilltop Are Recalled By Pageant

Lives there a man,
With soul so dead,
Who never to the world has said,
"Those were the good old days?"

Regardless of which days have been the best it is of much interest to most people to recall old times. Those who attended the pageant at Hoge Memorial church last Thursday have since that time recalled many of the old scenes of the Hilltop.

The above picture shows one of the early spots of the Hilltop, part of which is yet standing. The frame building, then located next to where Voss Brothers building now stands, was at one time a saloon. Furthermore it later was the home of Hoge Memorial church when it was first founded in 1905. The brick building has since been remodeled and now stands as the home of Voss Brothers Auto Co.

Back when the old church was founded and services were held in the old home of the saloon, later a bakery, the congregation was small but the living charter members are residents of the Hilltop. They include Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Deems, 35 Westmoor Ave.; Herbert Deems, 62 New Ave.; Mrs. Albert Jordan (Dorothy Deems), 127 Westmoor Ave.; N. C. Ault and son Fred, 105 N. Eureka Ave.; Mrs. J. P. Johnson, 29 N. Wheatland Ave.; Mrs. Lola Cooley, 29 N. Wheatland Ave., and Mrs. L. B. Birch, 138 S. Wheatland Ave.

Other Old Scenes

Then there was the three or four-foot mound where the Rivoli theatre now stands on which a person could stand and view the street cars on the Camp Chase line.

And the building of Sites Electric Co., was then standing by itself with but few residences from there to Hague avenue.

Among the other old buildings that are now standing was the Milliken building, and the building now occupied by C. R. Pepple at Eureka and Broad. Then, too, Stillman's cleaning

The Cowboys lost another game on their floor Friday night to South by a narrow score of 18-14. West continues to hold the cellar position in the city league with no games won.

At the end of the first quarter the score was 8-2 in favor of South and then at the half stood at 11-6 in the same fashion. The third period ended with the score of 15-10 in South's favor.

Change of Zone Asked By Ice Co. Is Disapproved

Council Rejects Plan to Make Carol Avenue Section Into Industrial Zone.

A proposal of the City Ice and Fuel company asking that the district facing on Carol avenue from Hague to Harris avenue be changed from business to first industrial zone was disapproved by city council Monday evening.

About 75 residents of that section were present at the council chamber in protest to the proposed change. The matter was referred to the service committee of which Floyd F. Green, 3016 Crescent Dr., is chairman. In a short time the committee reported as disapproving the matter.

Council pointed out that other sections further to the west were available and as conveniently located as the Carol avenue site. The site in question is a fast growing residential section and residents offered the same protests that were made when the ice company attempted to erect an ice manufacturing plant at Hague and Broad where their present service station is located.

Representatives of the ice company stated that a building would be built that would be a credit to the section if the change was allowed. No statement was made as to their plans following the action of council.

Varied Weather Menu and Snowfall in Ohio

Ohio has had a varied and cold career in the way of weather. In the winter of 1908-09 only 3.2 inches of snow fell, the smallest snowfall on record. However, the next winter, not to be outdone, came through with the grand total of 67.8 inches. The largest amount of snow to fall within 24 hours occurred January 13, 1917, with 6 inches and 4 more inches on the following day greeted the population. On January 15 of this winter 4.2 inches fell.

The number of inches of snowfall during the past five winters has been varied. In the winter of 1923-24, 11.8 inches fell; in 1924-25, 18.8 inches; in 1925-26, 30.3 inches; in 1926-27, 13 inches; in 1927-28, 10.2 inches, and up to the present time this winter about 11 inches. And according to the weatherman, there are at least 5 more inches to come.

Traffic Light Is Installed

Business Men Ask for Another at Eureka Avenue in Broad Street.

A traffic light was installed at Oakley avenue in West Broad street Thursday afternoon.

The light was placed there as the results of demands made by interested business men and residents of the Hilltop. Attention was attracted to the need of the light with the change of the districting of the school zones making Highland Avenue school for elementary students only and drawing many small children from north of Broad street.

In addition to the advantages to the school children it is also helpful to other pedestrians in the business section.

Several business men have suggested that another light be placed at Eureka avenue in Broad street in order to make that section safe for pedestrians. A light there would slow traffic to the point where the two midway blocks would be easily crossed without a great loss of time to the individual, it has been pointed out.

Old War Letters May Be Mailed

Shades of Camp Chase, which formerly stood where a part of the Hilltop is now built, came to light last week with the resolution presented the State Legislature by the Daughters of the Confederacy asking that 180 letters written by soldiers who died in the prison here during the Civil War be turned over to those who may claim them.

Further steps in the plan will include the printing of the names and addresses in southern newspapers in order that the rightful owners may claim them.

Back in 1862 a Mrs. Clark, a visitor at Camp Chase, was to have delivered the letters but she did not arrive and so they have been written for these many years.

The letters indicate that the treatment received at the camp was very good and their food was also plentiful and wholesome. Signs of their undying faith in their cause is explained by the many letters to loved ones in the south.

Match Games Played

In a match game Sunday at the Hilltop Bowling alleys the Capitol Loan Co., of Newark, took two out of three games from the Shank's Men's shop team. In another match game, Dolby & Son defeated the Burke Golf Co. team of Newark for three straight. Scores for Dolby were 874, 825 and 972, while those of Burke were 835, 771 and 787.

Features of New High School Pointed Out by West Student

There is quite a difference between 500 and 1400, but when those numbers represent people who are served daily by the cafeteria, the difference is even more marked. That was the problem which confronted Miss Emma Unempher and her staff upon moving into the new West High.

The first few days found many pupils, who for lack of time could not be served during the fifth and sixth periods. This difficulty was taken away by making the fourth a lunch period also. At present the fifth period ranks first with 700 pupils in the lunch line, next comes the sixth with 500 and the fourth with approximately 100.

The 20 women who operate the lunch room have plenty of modern facilities for their work. The kitchen equipment is divided into units, the pastry, salad, sandwich and range. At the north end is the dishwashing unit where every dish is thoroughly sterilized in the new dishwashing machine.

The science department at West High is one of the best equipped of its kind in the United States.

The physics department consists of a suite of four rooms, laboratory, an office, a storeroom and a lecture room. The desks in the laboratory are individual and each has electricity, hot and cold water, gas and a locker. There is a large switch board in the lecture room which provides alternating and direct currents for the whole science department.

Chemistry has a suite of three rooms which are used for chemistry, high school geography and laboratory. The "Lab" is outfitted with individual laboratory tables and spaces between for recitation. They are completely equipped.

West is the only high school in Columbus in which there is a greenhouse for botany. The conservatory faces the open court on the north wall. Mr. Stewart Cromer plans to fill it with green and flowering plants. After it is filled it will be one of the beauty spots of the building.

HOW I MAKE
By Readers of the Hilltop Record

DATE PUDDING

Bread scraps make a delectable pudding if mixed with chopped dates, moistened with milk to which one egg has been added and flavored and baked. It is excellent served with hot fruit juice.

Club Sandwiches for Informal Evening

A simple way of serving a club sandwich is to let each guest make his own. Arrange the separated and cleaned leaves of lettuce in a head in the center of a large serving platter. Lay a border of firm tomato slices around the lettuce, then a circle of white onion slices and border this either with bacon crisped on a griddle or thinly sliced cold chicken. A generous bowl of mayonnaise should accompany the platter. Let the host manipulate the toaster and the hostess busy herself with the pouring of delicious coffee while each guests selects his own sandwich filling and arranges his repast.

Ribbon Sandwiches

White bread,
Brown bread,
Butter,
Hard-boiled egg,
Cream,
Cheese,
Salad Dressing.

Spread a buttered slice of white bread with yolks of hard-boiled eggs, rubbed to a paste with salad dressing. Place on top of this a slice of brown bread spread with white cream cheese, add another slice of white bread, spread as before and an unspread slice of brown bread. Wrap in oil paper and a moistened napkin and keep cold. Just before serving remove the crust with a sharp knife and slice the bread into sandwiches alternately brown and white layers.

Prunes With Apricot Filling

½ lb. prunes,
½ lb. apricots,
Juice and rind of ½ orange,
Confectioners sugar.

Soak prunes and apricots separately over night, stone and dry the prunes. Put the drained apricots and the orange rind through the meat chopper. Mix until stiff with confectioners sugar and orange juice. Stuff the prunes with the filling, roll in sugar, serve as a decorative extra with meat, or store in a dry place and use as a confection for children.

Vegetable Chowder

2 pounds smoked ham,
1 pound Lima beans,
6 large potatoes (diced),
1 can whole grain corn.

Cook ham in waterless cooker until tender. Cook lima beans in separate pan until about half done. Remove ham from cooker and cut into small pieces, then add the lima beans, diced potatoes and corn. Cook until potatoes are tender, then add the ham. (Serves 10 or 12 persons.)

Who remembers the old Four-Mile House? It stood near the present site of the Hilltop Transfer Co., beyond Powell avenue. With the old building goes many exciting stories of stage coaches and for example the woman who was caught with bootleg whiskey fastened to the inside of her hoop skirt, which, in the language of an old timer, was as big as a good sized pig pen. It was also the headquarters for the political campaign when Vallandingham was running for Governor.

Revival Continues

RESOLUTIONS ON THE DEATH OF MRS. ISABELLE BURNSIDE.

Whereas, It was the will of the Heavenly Father to take from us one of our beloved and highly esteemed members:

Be it resolved that we, the members of the Personal Workers' class have sustained a great loss. Mrs. Burnside's judgment on all Bible questions was most valuable. How we will miss her only those so closely associated with her will know. Always a most faithful attendant, of our class, sickness or some extra good reason ever kept her from her place.

Our loss is surely Heaven's gain, for we know she walked and talked with the Father and He has called her to be one of His own.

Making Use of Old Magazines

Arctic explorers put newspapers between their blankets because there is no better insulation against bitter cold and wind than paper. We can apply the same principle in our homes by using old magazines under a thin pad or mattress which alone is not sufficient to keep out the cold.

Thin magazines tied around the milk or cream bottle on wintry days will prevent it freezing if it is left on the window or doorstep.

Large magazines with double pages may be made useful against moth destruction by wrapping small articles in the sheets after they have been painted with a warm solution of

Paraffin wax ..... 8 ounces
Naphtaline ..... 4 ounces

Newspapers are excellent protection against moths if painted with this solution.

In our modern houses and apartments we have forgotten the great insulating and warming properties of paper when placed under rugs and carpets. Heavy magazine paper is even more effective against cold than thin newspaper.

THE INSTALLATION OF A TRAFFIC LIGHT

For the motorist who must stop may times in city traffic to wait for red lights to change to green the installation of the new one at Oakley avenue in West Broad street may not be welcomed but in truth it is very much needed.

Not only the children at Highland Avenue school are to be aided but pedestrians in the business section will also be able to cross the streets now without a loss of much time and also endangering their lives. We extend a vote of thanks to those responsible for the light.

A SUBWAY FOR GRANDVIEW AVENUE

Residents of the Hilltop should join in the fight to build an underground crossing in Grandview avenue. The elimination of the many tracks there will help to speed up traffic across the short cut to the North End and Grandview as well as to reduce the hazard of crossing the tracks.

It is a common experience for those who use this route to be stalled at the crossing while one, two or possibly four trains make their way by with a long string of cars and at a slow speed.

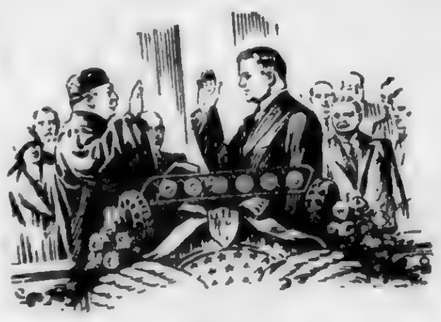
That the route is valuable as a time saver is evidenced by the fact that ten or fifteen minutes may be cut from the time required to go to the North Side or the university by the downtown route. We join in encouraging the elimination of the crossing and hope to see the work start at an early time.

For some the question is settled once they have given their opinion. The man who withdraws from the group because he isn't always given his way doesn't belong there in the first place.

Many of us are now buying our next winter coat while the clothing stores shout Chris Columbus' words "Sail on, sail on, sail on."

Some people have minds like mountains. . . they never change. But like them they aren't always so fertile.

Communism may be alright but it doesn't help pay your telephone bill. The neighbor never considers this part of it.



California sunshine may be bright but there is no need of our friends rubbing it in via mail.

Banana Tariff. . . Pleasing Everybody. . . . Letting the girls smoke

A Tariff on Bananas

It may be true that if there was a tariff on bananas as asked by certain fruit growing associations of the present congress that the number of apples eaten in this country would be more than doubled and thus aiding the fruit grower. It might also help to reduce the cost of sickness if the old apple proverb is really true.

However on the other hand it would appear that public's desire for the banana should not be thrown out now that they have learned that the fruit is not harmful and really has much in energy-giving qualities. The price of bananas at present is also pleasing to the person who must purchases the fruit for the family.

Who Should Be Pleased

The above brings thought of just who should be pleased in legislation. If the laws are made one way a certain group benefits and if a different attitude is taken another group will profit.

Those who have the power of legislation in their hands often use it to the advantage of a few instead of stopping to consider where the greatest good will be done. This is apparently a real test for a man in public life. If he can throw his vote to the side of the greatest number to be benefited in the face of the fact that he may be turned against by his friends, he will show himself as being capable of holding the public trust.

Should the Girls Smoke?

Soon the Ohio State University Board of Trustees will be faced with a question of which they probably know little about and which will evidently be turned down by them. They will be asked to permit the establishment of smoking rooms in the girls' dormitories.

A discussion of the matter before members of the Club brought this statement from Rel Pullin, "Smoking among women hasn't yet reached the point where it is considered by the great majority of the population as being a part of the progressive feminist movement of the day.

"Instead most any lady of middle age will object strenuously to the matter of smoking and cite their own girls as being examples of those who do not smoke. The facts remain, however, that these same girls are probably doing it behind their mother's backs."

Why the Rooms

"You may ask why the girls wish the rooms," said Captain Sentry, but this is simple since at present they are not allowed to smoke in their private rooms.

"The authorities of the school now ask for the rooms and it is a wise idea, because it is a better principle to have the girls smoking and know they are permitted to do so than to do it knowing it is against the rules."

A Better Way

"A better way for the mother to keep her girl from smoking," says Rel Pullin," is to allow her the privilege of smoking and then point out is harm, rather than to object merely on the basis of morals.

"Most young boys take up smoking because they think it makes them appear big. The same applies to girls only they do it because they think it is in keeping with the new movement and because they want to be different. Neither the small boy or the girl or woman get any real joy out of smoking.

Just Smiling

Did you ever go out on a smiling tour,
And smile alike on the rich and poor?
Did you watch the faces, tired and worn,
Light up, with a light that was heaven born?
Did you smilingly gaze on the little child,
Pure and innocent, meek and mild?
One, with unkempt hair, and face unclean,
Yet, as you smiled, grew bright, serene?
If you did, 'twas joy, and well worth while,
Upon all these to sweetly smile.

And as you passed along the street
Among all those you chanced to meet,
Did you smile on the ragged, barefoot boy,
And see his face light up with joy?
Or, perhaps, amid the jostling throng,
One bowed with trouble came slowly along
Did you take time to seek his face,
And then just smile, as you slackened your pace?
If you did, 'twas joy and well worth while,
Upon all these to sweetly smile.

'Tis pleasure, indeed, to greet our friends:
We enjoy the thrill it ever lends.
But He who walked the path we trod
Bid us look up, and follow God.
Our hearts for other souls must yearn,
The careless ones of Him must learn.
Oh, let the blessed light divine,
Of Jesus, through us ever shine;
The angels, then, will count it worth while,
As on all these we sweetly smile.

—Ethel Titus Worthen.

"Any man will say he admires the woman who does not smoke. In fact it shows sensibility on her part to the extent that she has not been carried away in a movement whereby she must be considered modern. It is her right as much as it is man's right, but she shows a better judgment in most instances by refraining from it."

The PEOPLES COLUMN

WATER IN THE STREETS

Editor the Hilltop Record:

Last summer the city passed an ordinance whereby the homes of the Hilltop were supposed to transfer their roof drain pipes from the sanitary sewers to the street sewers. This was found to be of little good and now that the snow and rain of winter are with us conditions are worse since the streets are flooded with water and slush, making it practically impossible to cross them. It is also very bad walking on the sidewalks where the water from the roof drains crosses the sidewalks. It is either very sloppy at such places or it is frozen so that it is dangerous.

I feel that some remedy should be offered at once. Why not put the drain pipes back where they were and leave the streets in better condition.

A Reader.

BROADVIEW NEWS

Editor Hilltop Record:

It is my desire to bring to the attention of your readers the activities of this flourishing section of the Hilltop, known as the Broadview addition.

We have organized a Civic Association which is supported by all residents of the addition, and hope to be heard from in all matters concerning the welfares of the Hilltop as well as that of our own section.

We have under construction a greater percentage of new homes than any other section of the city, also a fine church building to be completed in the spring. Plans are being drawn for one of the finest Catholic churches in the city to be built in our midst, and the new high school is surpassed by none.

Our social activities are many and of various natures. Of these I hope to keep your readers well informed.

Mr. Scott Denton, who won the Broadview digging contest in 1928 is soon to visit Henry Ford in Detroit to discuss plans for the new motor-driven weed digger, which he has invented.

Mr. Christy Michel is all smiles owing to the fact that he can sleep half an hour later since the new high school is opened.

Dell Ong has great plans for his spring gardening but in as much as he is now eating potatoes that cost him $12 a bushel, he expects to specialize on nasturtiums and sweet peas this year.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Jacobs have entertained their neighbors with several bus parties recently visiting nearby cities, and have proven themselves royal entertainers.

West Gate Lodge is making ready for the Washington birthday party which is expected to eclipse any of its past social events.

Worshipful Master Harry Brady and his officers are working hard to make the year 1929 the greatest in the history of the lodge and have the good wishes of all members.

OBITUARY

Mrs. Ellen N. Steadman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac VanGundy, departed this life on February 2nd, 1929, at 12:35 a.m., aged 79 years, 10 months and 26 days, was born March 6, 1849, near Kingston, Ohio, and united in marriage to Enoch Steadman in the year of our Lord 1868, to this union two daughters and one son were born, one daughter and the son having preceded her to the realms beyond, leaving one daughter Mrs. Lulu M. McCloud with whom she made her home for a number of years, one brother George VanGundy of Chillicothe, Ohio, one sister Clara B. Overly of Columbus, Ohio, six grand children, five great-grandchildren and two great-great-grandchildren, with a host of relatives and friends to mourn her loss. She was a faithful attender of Highland Ave. Friends church and Sunday school.

While she was of a very quiet disposition she was loved by all who knew her.

"Weep not for mother deceased,
Our loss is her infinite gain;
A soul out of prison released,
And freed from its bodily pain:
With songs let us follow her flight,
And mount with her spirit above,
Escaped to the mansions of light,
And lodged in the Eden of love.

Our mother, the haven hath gained,
Outflying the tempest and wind;
Her rest she hath sooner obtained,
And left her companions behind,
Still tossed on a sea of distress,
Hard toiling to make that blest shore
Where all is assurance and peace,
And sorrow and sin are no more.

The Sandman Story

By Martha Martin

"I've just heard an expression which interested me greatly," said Mr. Sun.

"Tell it to us, please, Mr. Sun," said the Sun Fairies. "We wonder whether we have ever heard the expression or not."

"This was it," said Mr. Sun. "Some people were planning a party. And they suggested to each other all sorts of things which would make the party start off with a vim and dash and all that sort of thing.

"They said that when people first got together at a party, or anything like that, they were apt to be a little shy at first.

"Later on the guests would be able to amuse themselves and each other and have a beautiful time, but at first these people were making all sorts of plans for games and pleasures which would get every one started right off in having a good time.

"Save Each One a Spider Web to Unravel."

"They were planning to arrange spider webs over the house and gave each one a spider web to unravel.

"They wound the balls of twine in and about the legs of tables and chairs, and all over objects which would not easily fall off or break. For the one who got to the end of the spider web first won a prize, and toward the end it was apt to get very exciting, as one could see the end of one's web.

"And when hurrying something was apt to be broken, so the safe way for the ones spinning the webs in the first place was to see that they wound them about good strong objects.

"Yes, I heard them explaining all of this.

"But they said the spider webs—which really meant balls of string wound about things for the guests to untwine as fast as they could and wind up again—would start everything going well.

"And then came the expression which I thought was so interesting."

"Yes," said the Sun Fairies, "we are ready to hear it."

"They said," Mr. Sun continued, "that by doing this they would break the ice."

"What?" the Sun Fairies exclaimed. "We have never heard that expression."

"Neither had I," said Mr. Sun. "And I was puzzled as to the meaning of it for some time."

"Did you finally?" the Sun Fairies asked.

"Yes," said Mr. Sun, "I kept looking in the window and paying attention, and at last it was explained so that I understood.

"You see, at first I was particularly puzzled because I knew it was too early in the year to break the ice.

"Well, I shall explain the expression to you.

"They meant when they said that they would break the ice, by having games ready at the start so that the party would begin right off in the right spirit, that the ones who were shy would lose their shyness right away.

"Breaking the ice meant that they would break the stiffness and the shyness of the guests at first by having plans made for them. And it seemed such a nice expression."

"We should think it would," said the Sun Fairies. "And we feel happy about it, too."

"Of course, I knew you would," said Mr. Sun.

"And then," he continued, "I saw the guests arrive at the party and sure enough! Everything began so gay, for every one was interested in the spider-web game. And then I saw a cake with lighted candles upon it for it seemed it was the birthday of one of the guests. The candles were of all sizes, some short, some tall, some looked as though they almost might topple over for they had melted in those directions at a party given some time before.

"And I heard the candles say in their bright little fashions:

"'We like it because we're used again and again. Of course there are some very superior candles in superior little holders and they're even in length and perfect and new. They're very fine. But we like to be as we are—stuck into a piece of paper over the cake which keeps us from spoiling the taste of the cake—good friendly candles, used until there is nothing left of us to use.'"

Pride and Penitence

By MARCELLA E. CARLSTON

Paul's arm tightened about her, and he began to form sentences similar to those which have been used in such circumstances by every generation, when the "toot-toot" of an automobile horn reached his ears. Looking around, he saw the car which Mr. Randall had given Kathryn on her last birthday, driven by that young lady herself.

"Come on home with me, Paul" she said, purposely neglecting to even recognize Mary. "Let Simpson come after your car."

"Not ready yet, sis," Paul replied briefly. "But I'll try to get in touch with Frank Ormsby if you're afraid to drive home alone."

"Never mind," Kathryn said, haughtily. "I have greater powers of discrimination than a certain brother of mine seems to have."

For Paul's sake, Mary remained silent, but she laughed inwardly as she thought of what would be the ultimate result of Kathryn's affair with Lord Ingleson. Paul pressed Mary's hand reassuringly.

"I am ashamed of your behavior, Kathryn," he said, sternly. "If you are so much better than other people, why can't you at least be courteous? Mary, here is fully your equal—"

Paul intended to say more, but Kathryn had started the machine and was soon out of sight.

"Don't pay any attention to her, Mary," Paul said. "I don't share her opinions, you know, and I am the one whom you will have to live with. But I do wish she would climb off her perch and act natural," he added.

"She will," Mary said, with more reason for being certain of the truth of her statement than Paul could understand.

CHAPTER X

After a period of four weeks, which Mary spent at home, she decided to return to the city.

"Why are you so anxious to leave me, Mary?" Paul asked, when he heard of her intention.

"I am not anxious, Paul, but my aunt said in her last letter that she missed me, and she begged me to visit her again. You know I must not be ungrateful to her for all the things she has done for me."

"Interception of letters, for one thing," Paul said, in a sour tone of voice. "I never expect to have much love for your aunt."

"She meant well, Paul. Past experience with men, in my opinion, has made her a little bitter on the subject."

"Hurry back as soon as you can, then," Paul finally said. "Centerville seems like a desert island to me when you are gone."

"Then I'll remain in Freport for some time so that you will properly appreciate me when I return."

Within a few days, the old Spencer home was again filled with girlish laughter.

"I wish you and your mother would come to live with me," Miss Spencer said to the girl one day. "I've been so lonesome since you went away. Maybe I was hard on you at times, but I did it for your own good."

"Yes, auntie, I know. Everything is all right now, any way."

"What is all right? What do you mean?"

"I am referring to the letters which I received and was forbidden to open. That was the only thing that really hurt."

"Yes, I remember. Go on."

"My returning the letters unopened and without reply caused a misunderstanding, but everything is cleared up now," Mary said, and extended her left hand to attract her aunt's attention.

"Do you mean that this is an engagement ring?" her aunt questioned, in a tone of disappointment.

"Exactly, auntie. What of it?"

"I think you could have done better than to marry a boy from Centerville. Other girls now living there seem to have higher aims. A pilot from the aviation field told me that he took a distinguished passenger in his plane to Centerville several months ago. He also informed me that the man, an English nobleman, had met a girl there whom he expects to marry. I was hoping that you would meet him."

"I know the person of whom you are speaking quite well, auntie, but I am sure that he is only an impostor."

"What makes you thing that?"

"I'll tell you all about it some day," Mary promised.

One morning, several days later, Mary left her aunt's home again, and that evening, the chief subject of conversation at Centerville was the arrival of Lord Ingleson on the afternoon train.

In anticipation of this event, the Park Hotel employees had been very active for the past few days, and Kathryn Randall's pride in herself arose to the highest limit, as she felt confident that the result of Lord Ingleson's visit would be profitable to her.

On the evening of Lord Ingleson's arrival, Mr. Randall called his daughter to the library.

"Another lecture, dad?" she asked coolly. "Well, hurry and have it done with."

"Yes, Miss Randall, another lecture. And I do not feel inclined to make it very brief since it probably concerns the most important step of your life. Do you intend to marry this Lord Ingleson?" he asked her.

"I haven't decided yet," Kathryn said, turning her eyes away from her father's direct gaze.

"Has he ever mentioned the subject to you?"

"Yes, he has."

"What did you tell him?"

"To give me time to consider the matter."

"You have had plenty of time. If he comes here tonight for an answer, what do you intend to say?"

Kathryn hesitated, her anger slowly getting the better of her.

"I promised to give my answer to him, not to you. I am of age, and need none of your advice. I suppose Paul suggested this interview," she said, remembering her brother's attitude when the subject of her friendship with Lord Ingleson was mentioned.

Mr. Randall did not give her the information desired, but she felt positive that Paul had something to do with the matter.

"Kathryn," Mr. Randall said, trying to speak more kindly, "I am talking to you for your own good. Give me time to investigate this matter; to see whether or not this Lord Ingleson is a gentleman or an outlaw in disguise."

"Oh, blazes! You'll insult the man yet. Lord Ingleson demands respect, not insinuating questions about his character and identity.." Kathryn was, by this time, in tears.

At that moment, Mrs. Randall entered the room.

"What are you doing Mr. Randall?" she asked. This was always her way of addressing her husband when a family quarrel was imminent.

"Attempting to talk sense to this girl," he responded briefly.

"Trying to spoil the best day of her life, you mean," Mrs. Randall said angrily. Then she turned her back to her husband and said to Kathryn:

"Go to your room and bathe your eyes, dear. Lord Ingleson must not find you crying. Men hate to see women in tears."

"You and I agree on one thing, at least," Mr. Randall said. "Wait a moment, Kathryn," he went on, calling to his daughter, who was opening the door leading to the hall. "Always remember the warning I have given you. If you make a step this evening and regret it later, do not blame me."

The girl left the room without a word, followed by her fashionable mother. In the hall, they met Paul.

"Why did you mention your sister's affairs to your father?" Mrs. Randall asked her son. "Since you insist upon marrying that Hunter girl, someone will have to retrieve the family honor some way. Lord Ingleson is our only way out."

"And you are willing to sacrifice your daughter's happiness in order to do it," Paul replied with some heat.

"Who said anything about her happiness? She was happy enough until your father interfered."

With a shrug of his shoulders, Paul tried to dismiss the matter from his mind, but love for his selfish sister would not permit him to consider the affair lightly. He went to his own room, and without turning on the lights, fell into deeper meditation than ever. Finally, he arose quickly from his chair, as an idea had suggested itself to him. He opened one of the drawers of the high-boy, and after a little searching, found a half-mask and a large black handkerchief. Then, after quietly making his way to the attic, he found some old clothes that had been worn by his father in the days when the Randalls were less fortunate than at present.

He then hastened from the house by the back stairway, and after dodging through alleys and less travelled streets, he soon came to a lonely place which Lord Ingleson always passed on foot on his way to the Randall home, as he pretended to prefer the exercise of walking to riding in such taxicabs as were used in Centerville.

Paul had not long to wait when a figure dressed in fashionable evening clothes, wearing a large black hat, and carrying a cane and a package which resembled a box of candy, came into view. Paul gripped his gun, which was not loaded and stepped in the path of Lord Ingleson.

"Stick 'em up," he yelled, trying hard to imagine himself a real bandit. Slowly, Lord Ingleson raised his hands as requested, "as though uncertain whether to submit to the latest thing or not."

"You Lord Ingleson?" the man holding the gun inquired.

"Y-yes."

"Got any papers to prove your identity?"

"What's it to you?"

Paul repeated the question in a sterner tone, holding his gun significantly.

"N-not with me," was the reply.

"How about trading clothes with me, boy?" Paul asked, suddenly changing his tactics. "I'd like to call on the Randalls myself, but I'm afraid they wouldn't like my appearance in this outfit."

"If you want what little money I have on my person, and this watch, take them." Lord Ingleson said, neglecting his English accent. "But I can't lend you my clothes."

"Yes, you can, and you'd better hurry. I want your money, too. I'm not in this business for nothing. Let's have a look at that watch."

Lord Ingleson reluctantly handed it over, and Paul could readily see that it was of little value, not the kind an English nobleman would use.

"Where did this time-piece come from, the Five and Ten?" Paul questioned.

"No, that's a good watch. Cost me one hundred dollars," Lord Ingleson replied.

"You're a liar; but no matter about the watch. I want those clothes you are wearing, and Slick Slide Pete usually gets what he wants. You step back of those bushes, in case a lady should come along, you know."

"There comes some one now, and it isn't a lady either; it's a policeman," Lord Ingleson said quickly.

This detracted Paul's attention, and he foolishly turned his head. When the sound of retreating footsteps reached his ear, it was too late. His captive was out of sight. A useless pursuit followed, and Paul, disgusted with himself, returned to his home, where he made his appearance more presentable. He arrived at the foot of the stairs in time to hear a loud ring of the door bell, and went himself to admit the caller. It was Lord Ingleson. Kathryn was not ready to make her appearance, Paul took the responsibility of entertaining the guest.

"Remove your hat," he suggested, and for fun, roughly assisted his newly made acquaintance in the uncovering. What was his surprise when he discovered that a dark wig came with the hat, revealing the coagery red curls of a girl, whom he immediately recognized. At first, he was unable to understand the situation, as he did not know that Mary was so good at acting. As this was neither the proper time or place to discuss the subject, Paul assisted the girl in replacing that part of the disguise. Then, as no sound was to be heard, he took the figure of "Lord Ingleson" in his arms, and found himself in an awkward situation when the door opened unexpectedly and Mr Randall entered the room, spell-bound with astonishment.

"Don't tell anyone—not even him, yet," Mary whispered.

"What's wrong with you, boy," Mr Randall asked, his eyes as big as door knobs. He moved closer to his son, and placed his hand on the boy's face.

"No fever," he said, still more bewildered. "My son, what is the matter?"

"Come to my room, Mister, and I'll tell you," Paul said, acting as unnatural as possible, in order to avert Mr. Randall's attention from "Lord Ingleson."

With traces of anxiety showing plainly on his features, Mr. Randall followed his son. He felt more at ease, however, when they reached the privacy of Paul's room, and the young man began to act like himself again.

"What's wrong with you, any way?" Mr. Randall questioned anxiously.

"Sit down, dad, and I'll tell you about it. I am trying to make Lord Ingleson think that Kathryn has a crazy brother, then we'll see how long he will remain in Centerville."

"By Jove! You've relieved my mind boy. Your scheme sounds all wrong to me, but I'm glad that there is really nothing seriously wrong with you."

"Do not mention this incident to mother or Kathryn," Paul cautioned. "If you should, I'd never have a moment's peace while at home."

Mr. Randall made the required promise, and decided to postpone his interview with Lord Ingleson, for the present, at least.

CHAPTER XI

"Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Randall announce the engagement of their daughter Kathryn, to Lord Merwyn Ingleson."

So ran an item in the society news of the Centerville Sentinel.

Mrs. Randall and her daughter read the article complacently; Mr. Randall with a scowl; Paul with a mixture of laughter and doubt. He had pleaded with Mary to drop her disguise, but the girl had insisted upon finishing what she had begun, promising, however, that Kathryn would not be publicly humiliated.

Unaware of anything that could happen to interfere with her plans, Kathryn went ahead with preparations for her wedding. The patience of salespeople in the local dry goods and department stores was taxed to the limit. The French modiste, who came from a nearby city, declared that she could not work under Miss Randall's supervision. Not until Mrs. Randall consented to almost double her salary would she consent to stay.

Weeks of disorder and almost open strife in the Randall home preceded the day which Kathryn was looking forward to. When Mr. Randall came home in the evening, he usually found each of the servants detailed to perform some duty for Kathryn. His wife merely nodded when she saw him; and by the end of the first month, both Paul and Mr. Randall were wondering what could have prompted anyone to write a song like "Home Sweet Home."

Finally, the long-looked-for day arrived, sunny and bright. The wedding was to take place at four o'clock in the afternoon, but at three o'clock, an unexpected guest arrived. It was Mary Hunter.

"I wish to speak to Miss Randall," she informed the servant who admitted her.

"Miss Randall is not seeing anyone today, but I will give her a message."

"I must see her personally, as I have very important news for her."

"Be seated, Miss, and I will see what I can do for you,"

He returned in a short time.

"She says that she will see you, but that the interview must be very brief."

Mary followed the man up the stairs, who conducted her to the door of Kathryn's boudoir. When the door was opened, and Kathryn saw Mary standing there, she drew herself up with an air of hauteur.

"I supposed it was somebody. What a beggar like you could possibly want with me is beyond my understanding."

"If you will allow me to speak to you privately, I promise to be very brief. What I have to say concerns the man whom you expect to marry."

"I have no desire to hear your story, so please go away, as I need every moment for myself this afternoon."

Mary did as she was bidden, feeling that the girl had been given her chance. After she had gone, Kathryn's curiosity almost prompted her to recall the girl for an explanation, but her pride prevented. The brief conversation raised her nerves to a higher pitch of excitement, and when an hour later, a servant informed her that Frank Ormsby insisted upon seeing her, she grew suddenly alarmed, and was almost on the verge of postponing either temporarily or permanently her marriage with Lord Ingleson, of whom she really knew very little. Then she thought of the invitations which had been mailed, the assortment of presents which were scattered all over the house, with more due to arrive at any moment. She lapsed into a reverie of the hours she had spent in Frank's arms, accepting his kisses and caresses.

Of Interest to the People of the Hilltop and Vicinity

OUR robins are snowbirds now. The one seen last week must have been one that was just leaving for the south.

Those scoring for West were: Schaffer, 4; Deshler, 2; Wills, 3; Follmer, 3, and Larkin, 3. East seconds won from West seconds in the preliminaries 14-12.

Principal Advises Book on Manners for West Students

When the first assembly of West High school was held Tuesday during the registration period, Otto H. Mardy, principal, recommended a book on "Manners and Conduct" and advised the students to follow the contents.

He quoted from it and applied it to conduct in the new building, including care of waste paper and respect for property. He advised the students to cultivate dignity of bearing and poise of manner in keeping with the new building.

The meeting was opened by singing the Doxology in a spirit of thankfulness for the new building and beautiful surroundings provided by the city through the taxpayers.

General Washington Is Dead

Just at the time of the celebration of Washington's birthday there also comes news of his death. This time the news is printed in the Ulster County Gazette, Kingston, on January 4, 1800, and belonging to R. D. Madden, contractor, 397 S. Wheatland Ave.

The paper, thin and yellow from age, contains on the front page news of Congress and of the arrival of ships. The inside pages are in mourning with dark black borders and column rules and devoted to the telling of the story of Washington's death.

Resolutions of men of Congress are printed within telling of their sorrow over the death of the former president. One is signed by John Adams. A poem of several stanzas, written by a girl, gives this final tribute to Washington:

Weep—kindred mortals, weep—no more you'll find,
A man so just, so pure, so firm in mind;
Rejoicing Angel, hail the heavenly sage!
Celestial spirits greet the wonder of Age.

Another point of interest about the paper is found in the advertisements. The following lost ad is contrasted with those of the present day.

Notice

Came to the subscriber a young heifer about 1 year old last spring, marked with a piece cut off her right ear, a star in her forehead and white under her belly. The owner by paying charges is desired to take her away. Seth Mosier, Kingston, January 4, 1800

Madden also possesses a copy of the Union County Press, published at Marysville, O., May 8, 1861. Another old paper tells of the death of President Lincoln.

In addition to the old newspapers Madden has a collection of many other old things of which his coins are the most outstanding. A half dollar dated 1772 and a quarter dated 1775 are unusual. He also has a half dollar dated 1805 and a silver dollar of 1804.

Other curios include silver spoons of the days of the rush to California and Colorado, a peculiarly twisted old cane and more coins.

A few years ago he lost several of his old coins and other money he had on hand when he was robbed at his residence after being knocked in the head. The robber was a woman, he says, who came to his door at 3 o'clock in the morning under the pretense of wanting to use his telephone. Since that time he is taking greater precaution in caring for his valuables and is better able to defend them, he states.

Excellent Results

An attorney was recently made administrator of an estate of a deceased resident of the Hilltop. He inserted a want ad in the Record advertising the household goods for sale.

"The results from your advertisement were excellent. About fifty people with money were at the sale and everything sold." This he wrote following the sale.

Hilltop people are finding this to be their best advertising medium. If you have something for sale, for rent, want to rent, want help or wish to advertise a lost article your chances for results are better with the Record. A solid circulation of 7150 each week.

J. O. White May Get Ford Sedan Offered By Business Men

The possibility of J. O. White, 142 N. Ogden Ave., being named the winner of the new Ford Tudor Sedan offered by the Hilltop Business Men's Association in the recent nine weeks' advertising campaign, looks good. His number, the first alternate, is the nearest one to the winner that has been presented at the Hilltop Bank to date.

White filed his ticket about ten days ago and several other alternates have also been filed. If the winning number, now on display in the stores of the Hilltop merchants, members of the business men's association, is not presented by noon March 1, the car will be turned over to White.

Parents of Today Have Greater Obligations Says Ohio State Professor.

Parents of this day have greater obligations than those of former years Dr. S. N. Maxfield of the psychology department of Ohio State university pointed out to his audience of members of the West Broad School Parent-Teacher Association Friday evening in the school auditorium. His subject was "Parenthood as a Profession."

These obligations are due to the fact that the economic situation has changed, the families are smaller and there is a greater fund of information that is more easily obtainable, he continued.

"Parents should find greater joy in their work," he stated. The fact that a child has won success should not be the only reason for rejoicing. It is often the bad reports that set the child right and cause eventual success.

The Hunters and Anglers' Club orchestra played several selections and also accompanied S. P. Brown, who sang a group of songs.

A representative of the Columbus and Franklin County Parent-Teacher Association explained the pageant to be given in March.

Schools Plan Program For Washington Day

Schools, University and Banks to Be Closed in Observance of Birthday Tomorrow.

Washington's birthday will be celebrated by several of the schools on the Hilltop with special assemblies and class room programs today.

No special program has been planned at West Broad other than that to be given by the first grades, which will probably be concerning Washington. During the past two weeks special studies of Lincoln and Washington have been taken up in class room study with an endeavor to teach the ideals and traits of these two characters of American history. Many colonial pictures have been brought to class to illustrate the work.

Schools and Bank Closed

The public schools and Ohio State university will be closed Friday in observance of Washington's birthday.

The Hilltop bank will also be closed during the day.

The first, second and third grades of John Burroughs school will have a special program this afternoon from 1 to 2 o'clock. The other grades will have their's from 3 to 4 o'clock. Following is the program:

America Song, school.
Salute to the Flag, school.
American's Creed, school.
Star Spangled Banner, school.

Highland Avenue school has planned a program to include Cecil J. Randall and Superintendent J. C. Collicott as speakers at their assembly period in the auditorium of Glenwood Methodist church. Two pledges to the school will be given by Dorothy Keen and Mar Irwin Fullen. A talk on the school council will be given by David Randall. Edna Corcoran will play a violin solo and Robert Wolfe of Troop 45 Boy Scouts will assist in the bugling and presentation of colors.

Due to the fact that they have no auditorium at Starling Junior High no special programs have been planned other than those to be given in the class rooms. Many teachers have planned programs for the home room period. The need of an auditorium at Starling is being felt by students and faculty since they were used to one at Central.

Here Is First Linguistic Line

Although last week we announce the birth of Tongue Twisters they will be known from now on as Linguistic Lines. From the replies received this week we believe the competition will be keen. Each week we will print a sample sentence like the one below. The object of the contest will be to beat the sample and get your sentence in the Record the next week. We will print the three best sentences each week. Sentences will be judged on the number of words and the grammatical unity.

All entries must be in writing and may be mailed to the Linguistic Editor or left at the office of the Hilltop Record, not later than 5:30 p. m. on Monday of each week.

For next week our key letter is A. To qualify, each word of your sentence must begin with the letter A. For example: Although Aunt Anna and Aunt Alice always argue at all annual assemblies, Aunt Amelia, arguing accurately against Aunt Anna and Aunt Alice, always annuls Aunt Anna's and Aunt Alice's awful, annual arguments.

Mother's Cook Book

THINGS EVERYBODY LIKE

Mothers who are the busiest people in the world need help often in planning meals. To have them wholesome, attractive, and at the same time economical as to one's income, is not the easiest thing in the world.

With small children, the meals must be simple but wholesome. This rule will work for those in the family who are aged.

Nourishing soups, cream of vegetable or mixed vegetable soups are always good. Young children and old people should have food that is easy of digestion.

Active adults are able to digest various combinations of foods, but with children the less complicated food is best.

Custards, junkets, rice and tapioca for puddings will be easy of preparation and are not taxing on the digestion. Fresh fruits, dried fruits, baked apples and prunes are all desirable.

Fig Omelet

Cut small figs into pieces and stew them in a little sugar and orange juice until tender. Beat the yolks of four eggs until thick, adding one tablespoonful of water for each egg; fold in the stiffly beaten whites and pour into a well-buttered omelet pan. Cover with the figs and when well cooked on the bottom, fold and serve with the syrup.

Rice With Bananas

Season cold boiled rice with melted butter, the grated rind of a lemon, add two beaten eggs and sugar to taste, cook until the eggs are set, pack into a buttered border mold and keep warm ten minutes. Turn out carefully and fill the center with sliced bananas. Pour over any fruit juice or a syrup flavored with lemon.

Apple Fluff

Grate a tart apple and mix with sugar to sweeten, add a grating of orange or lemon and beat with a dover beater, adding one unbeaten egg white. When stiff and able to stand alone, heap in sherbet cups, garnish with a cherry or a bit of bright jelly and serve. Or serve with a boiled chilled custard for a sauce.

Another pretty dessert made the same way, is this: Take one-half of a glass of any good jelly, the white of an egg, beat together until stiff. Serve with cream or with custard for a sauce.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

THE LOVER'S HAIR

Here is a superstition of very ancient date which still exists in some rural districts of the United States and Canada, as well as in England and Continental Europe. When a girl hears the first call of the robin in the spring, let her take off her shoe and stocking from the left foot and if, upon turning the stocking inside out, she finds a hair in the heel of it, it will be of the same color as the hair of her future husband. In countries where the wearing of shoes and stockings is not so common as here the investigator need merely look to see if hair is clinging to her left heel. In one section down South they say this experiment in divination should be tried when the call of the first turtle-dove is heard, and in England it is the first cuckoo. In Westphalia, Germany, it is at the sight of the first swallow that the peasant looks to see if there is a hair under the foot. But in its essence the superstition is the same on both sides of the Atlantic and in all sections. In it are the survival of several ancient ideas. In the direction that the divination be tried when the note of the bird which is the harbinger of spring is heard, we see the idea of an appeal to Demeter, the goddess of vegetation—of that vegetation the resuscitation of which is just beginning. But Demeter was also the patroness of marriage and, therefore a proper goddess for the curious maiden to appeal to in such matters. It has been shown how the moon-goddess when appealed to upon like matters shows the maiden her future husband in a dream. But Demeter answers the prayer of her votary by showing the maiden a hair of her future husband's head. And it has already been stated how closely related, how almost identical—the ancients conceived a man and his hair to be, even when the two were severed.

Valley Well Named

Death valley received its name from the fact that in 1850 a party of gold-seekers with their families made a one-day camp in the valley and less than half of them survived, the remainder being overcome by heat and thirst. A few escaped over the Panamints to the bountiful Californian plains; the others returned to the East.

AMERICAN LEGION WELFARE PROGRAM

The very foundation upon which the American Legion is built is "Service." This service was rendered in time of stress during the World War but the American Legion, the outgrowth of that Service, does not stop there, but tries to render equally as valuable a service in time of peace, through its Americanism program, its problem of assisting comrades that were disabled in the World War and its Child Welfare Program.

The Legion is first concerned about the minor children of World War veterans and secondary they are concerned and are pledged to use their influence to assist all minor children of the state. This assistance comes in the form of aiding in Mothers' Pensions, by establishing Boy Scout Troops and making the living conditions the best possible.

Because the Legion fully realizes that the proper training of the child today will make for a better nation in the future, the American Legion has recognized that private home environment and training are the best known to lay the "Corner Stone" of our future men and women. Therefore, their first resolution adopted is that no child shall be removed from its home because of poverty alone and that it is the American Legion's duty and privilege to see that all assistance is given the family unit so that it may remain intact.

The Legion estimates that its peak of Child Welfare Work with the ex-service men's children will be in 1938, when there will be approximately 1000 children of veterans a year becoming either partially or totally dependent upon the county or state for their support and maintenance.

N FOR SPRING

n days does not mean that spring t afford an opportunity to begin those things that we were going

It will soon be time for making improvements about the home and cleaning and beautifying will be the main task. Snow and slush of winter mixed with drifting coal soot have left the community with a duty on hand, that of a spring clean-up campaign. Now is the time to plan, for the true spring can't be far off.

As modern as the air mail, is a phrase often heard now but, nevertheless, there are those in business and in private life who haven't advanced out of the covered wagon stage yet.

Independence may be a wonderful thing but when it reaches the stage where one person refuses to keep his friends because of his egotical actions it is sure to work a detriment.

If the happenings of Chicago were transferred to Mexico or Nicaragua there would probably be some marines on hand soon. Chicago would probably do well under a protectorate.

With all the news of the engagement of Lindbergh filling the papers it is appropriate to recall that he had a very trying task on his hands in crossing the Atlantic. This was avoided, however, when the famous flyer passed over Scotland. The nuts tightened up.

Wills Kept on Record

Lawyers and searchers in titles frequently apply for permission to scrutinize old wills in the records of the New York Surrogates' court, in some cases where the influence of the dead hand is still felt. Often they play a part in resolving title to a piece of property that may have been originally secured from the first Indian resident of Manhattan or granted later by the Dutch or by King Charles or King James.

The expression "thumbs down" originated from the old Roman gesture expressing disapproval, given as a signal to the victorious gladiator to slay the loser.

About This Time of Year

The Spectator

A look in on the average home with a young daughter.

A Youthful Love Affair

The break came on Sunday afternoon and it continued to be the subject for the next six hours. We heard it at night when the last notes of the radio were allowed to be made audible and we heard it after the first jingles of the Big Ben in its morning chimes.

Several hundred solutions to the matter had been given by both parties of the affirmative and as for the negative side we are able to say an equal number of rebuttals were in the making. At least the debate promised much in interest . . . providing you hadn't heard it practiced from morning to night.

Trifling matters, I said to myself, recalling of course that all youthful love affairs work themselves into better or worse, either of which doesn't make any difference now.

The Beginning—

At 12 the old homestead appeared brighter, as if the Almighty had allowed the sun to shine a while longer over the door step. But the real truth was that the first-born of the female sex had had a birthday party and neighbors' sons had centered their youthful admiration on one whom we call Virginia. Little did they realize, innocent boys, all the family disturbances they were to set afoot. But sooner or later it must happen and so with such a setting both mother and daughter were able to assume their lead role in this drama that was to continue for many years.

At 14 she was allowed her first "date" for a Junior High school party. The door bell acted nervous like when her admirer presented himself that evening. After bashfully nodding his head to the folks he reached the door and the two departed. This was the first night and mother was under the bridge lamp when they returned from the party about 11:30.

Further Disturbances

And so these first few attentions shown daughter were but of passing worth and we go a step forward to the time when later in High school Virginia seems to have been left off the roll when a party list was made up this causing some amount of disturbance at home.

Mother just couldn't see the reason of the sudden decline in her daughter's popularity, for so it appeared to her.

Of little importance was the matter to Virginia for she forgot the affair and went about her duties as if it had not happened. Mother, however, persisted in believing she had lost her popularity and thus began to question her as to the cause for such.

So it continues thus for several years. Mother has had an extreme interest in Virginia which on the surface appears that she may have a point to be gained, namely, having the satisfaction of knowing her daughter will not grow up to be an old maid.

An Explanation

Referring back to the break, a word of explanation is due perhaps. The case was just this. Philip, supposedly Virginia's "steady" at the time, had taken a childish fancy that he could have some additional fun and cause some amount of childhood jealousy by asking her to return his high school pins. As for their actual worth perhaps they were valued originally at a dollar for the lot but as you know, you who have passed the stage, it's the sentimental value that counts when pins are planted on foreign soil.

Not content to wait till school time next day, this young disturber gave a telephone call and announced that he would make a visit soon after in quest of his sentimental treasures.

A hurried visit and a hurried departure made the situation appear as well and satisfactorily settled but, nay! Can such a childish trick pass without further attention?

"Well of all things," this from mother.

"Flighty? I guess so!" This from Virginia.

"I never saw a boy act so. I'd never speak to him again." Mother again

More Revelations

And so, truthfully speaking, into the night. His good and bad points were once again brought to light. Again we learned that he was a wonderful chap and that his dad had sacks full of money and apartments for rent. Then, too, there was a review of all the things that had happened between them to date. We even learned that he had gone so far as to kiss Virginia. Mother was partly astonished and partly proud of this last fact so she dismissed it immediately.

It was a sympathetic scene but a hard time one would have had trying to figure out who to sympathize with. It appeared that sometime the case would end but when?

Developments of the day are exactly as you think and Virginia comes home from school all "pinned up" again and apparently as happy as if nothing had happened. Mother, too, seemed satisfied and surely she would have been willing to retrace her words and thoughts of a fortnight if it had been necessary.

The American Family

The conversation? Well, no it didn't cease. Instead it was just more pleasant and not so noticeable. As for how long the pins will remain as they now are one is at loss to say but free to guess that a similar word battle will be waged within forty-eight hours and thereafter until this puppy love stage of the first-born female of the sex is passed and mother has further assurance that her daughter is pleasing and popular enough to be able to land a mate.

The scene of course is any American home in which the above characters may be by nature placed. The characters themselves are true to life if you will but look about at those fond mothers who have a young daughter who is going forth for her first ventures in Loveland

SYMPATHY

The PEOPLES COLUMN

APPOSED TO CLOSED LUNCH PERIODS

To the Editor:

I noticed an article in the Occident, West High school paper, asking for a recreation period following lunch periods at noon for the students at West.

In my estimation this is a very fine idea and one that should be furthered. The students should have some recreation during the day and noon is the proper time for it.

The closed lunch period does not meet so well with the approval of many of the mothers I have found out but, nevertheless, it is a trial and results may yet come from it.

Students of high school age should not be cooped up all day inside a building. Where it is at all possible I would say allow them to go home for their lunches. This gives them exercise and fresh air. Their work in return will show results.

If they can't have the opportunity to go home for lunches they should at least be given a chance for noon recreation.

Soiled Piano Keys

If it is only superficial dirt on piano keys, a damp cloth will remove the substance, or a cloth dipped in milk. Do not have the cloth so wet that any liquid runs between the keys. After cleansing, allow the piano to remain open so that the sunlight may keep the keys white. Dust regularly.

Italian Singers

Italy has produced much more than her proportion of singers of world renown. Some have attributed this to the climate, some to the diet, some to the open-air life. These may have helped, but others insist that the most important element in the success of the Italian-born singer is the Italian language itself. In Italy the child is taught to love beauty in nature and art.

Pride and Penitence

By MARCELLA S. CARLSTON

Then the scene changed to a castle in England, aristocratic and forbidden looking, yet desired at some time or other by all young society girls. In sharp contrast, she could see a four-room cottage, which might be rather shabby. Why couldn't Frank Ormsby have been more fortunate, she wondered. Still undecided, she opened the door to admit Frank, who at first was in doubt as to how she would receive him. Knowing her as he did, he could almost read the expression of her face.

"It isn't too late, yet, Kathy, to change your mind, but in an hour from now, it will be. "I've nothing to offer at but my love and a promise to do my best; but I want you so much. This foreigner will never make you happy. I have known you all my life, and I understand you. He may have very little, if any, patience with you. Won't you please accept this last chance for happiness?" He came close to her then, and held her closely.

"This must be our last, Frank. You know that I couldn't live in poverty. You have all my love, but Lord Ingleson will have my life. It is inevitable."

Her tone was so final that Frank pushed her from him, and hastened blindly down the stairs, while Kathryn tried to repair the ravages done to her makeup.

Downstairs, the guests were soon arriving in large numbers. Mr. Randall and Paul were both wondering how the day would end, the older man being satisfied that since his son seemed somehow confident that Lord Ingleson would never become a member of the family, everything would somehow be all right.

Mrs. Randall, though trying to be attentive to the guests, often wore an anxious look on her face, as though even she was beginning to doubt the advisability of her daughter's approaching marriage. Everyone was wondering where the bridegroom could be. The hands of the clock slowly moved to five minutes of four. One minute passed, two, three. Still no sign of Lord Ingleson.

The clock slowly chimed the hour of four. The guests stirred restlessly. The bridesmaids were whispering excitedly. The house became very silent. Mary, slipping in at the rear entrance with a bundle under her arm, again insisted upon seeing Kathryn privately. Accordingly, all the bridesmaids were sent from the room.

"Kathryn, why don't you give up this idea of marrying Lord Ingleson? I am sure that you could be happier with Frank Ormsby than you could ever be with anyone else."

"But I have taken my choice and must abide by my own decision."

"May I use your dressing room for a moment. I have a surprise for you."

Kathryn looked at the other girl in amazement, but granted the request. Several moments later, she heard the door opening, and of course, expected to see Mary Hunter. Instead, to her surprise and bewilderment, there stood Lord Ingleson. Not yet correctly comprehending the situation, as her mind had been greatly overtaxed during the last two hours, Kathryn felt a repulsive shudder creep over her.

"How did I ever imagine myself in love with him?" she wondered. "And how can I marry him——Oh, Stewyn,—Lord Ingleson, I mean; I can't marry you! I can't! You doormaids and tell the guests what I have told you." No, don't come near me; I—Oh!"

"Don't you know me, Kathryn?" The tone of the voice was no longer affected, and as Kathryn, stared at the figure before her in wonder, Mary began to remove the important part of her disguise. To her surprise, Kathryn did not throw a temperamental fit, but quite the reverse.

"Mary Hunter! And it was you all the time! I see it all now. For the first time in my life, I am forced to admit, your face looks good to me. I was beginning to hate Lord Ingleson."

She paused to take a long breath of relief.

"But the problem is far from being solved yet. What will people say? They must never know that you have played this prank."

The matter was not left for them to decide, for presently, the door was opened in anything but a gentle fashion, and Gertrude Matthews made her appearance.

"Is it over?" she asked Kathryn, completely ignoring Mary's presence.

"What do you mean, the wedding?"

"Yes! I came in a hurry up the rear stairs, and did not know."

"There is to be no wedding!" Kathryn said. "Lord Ingleson, it seems, has misrepresented himself and I have changed my mind!"

"Well, it's a good thing. I spent two hours, myself, waiting for him at a designated place in New York City, and he failed to arrive."

"Look around a little bit and see if you can't figure out the situation," Kathryn suggested.

Then Gertrude noticed Mary's appearance, and recognized the clothes that had been worn by "Lord Ingleson."

"What is the meaning of this?" she asked, shaking the girl's shoulders roughly.

"We both deserved it, Gertrude," Kathryn admitted. "Remember the way we always snubbed her. She has evened up the score, and I have nothing to complain of, myself."

"No, of course not, with Frank Ormsby in the background. I have never been in love." She might have added: "with the exception of one time."

"I'll report this and see that you are properly punished," Gertrude threatened.

"No, you won't," said a masculine voice behind her. "Mary probably did go a little too far, but I think that one of you girls, at least, has learned a valuable lesson. And as to exposing this affair to the public I know that you couldn't endure being laughed at. Mary has the upper hand, so you may as well accept the situation, and keep the matter silent."

Gertrude saw the common sense of his advice, and she left the Randall home as quietly as she had entered. In order to prevent Kathryn from being too greatly humiliated in the public eye, Mary again masqueraded as Lord Ingleson, and pretending to be greatly agitated, made the announcement to the guests that the prospective bride had changed her mind and refused the hand of Lord Ingleson in marriage at the last moment. A murmur of disappointment arose from the audience, but "Lord Ingleson" had another announcement to make.

"There is to be a wedding, though, so please remained seated. No names will be mentioned, however, at this time."

"Lord Ingleson" bowed and apparently took "his" departure. In the meantime, Kathryn had summoned Frank, who assured her that his offer still "held good" especially since Mary had told him that Kathryn had changed her mind before knowing the real identity of Lord Ingleson.

After a mad rush to the Marriage License Bureau, Kathryn's wedding took place the same as planned with only two changes—the time of day, and the bridegroom.

Many ridiculed the girl for sacrificing a titled Englishman for a poor boy with no social standing whatever. Others remarked that it was a good thing that the girl changed her mind before it was too late. The majority thought that the unusual event gave them something to talk about and served as a break in the monotony of small town life.

"Now that you have gained your point with Kathryn and furnished some real comedy to everyone concerned, how about giving me a little thought," Paul said to Mary one day. "It has been a long time since we became engaged," he added suggestively.

"You can wait another year or two can't you?" Mary teased.

Paul took her in his arms. "No," he answered: "Not even another week. If I don't claim you pretty soon, someone else may get ahead of me. Besides I have at last made the grade in New York, and in order to properly care for my interests, we should go there to live at once."

In after years, Paul had many ups and downs on Wall Street, and like the majority of people, had a few of them in his home life; but neither Mary nor Paul ever regretted the step they had taken.

Back in Centerville, Kathryn lived a contented life with Frank Ormsby as partner. Pride was no longer her ruling star, neither did she go to the other extreme. She, at last, recognized her mother-in-law as an equal, and felt ashamed of her past conduct. Mrs. Randall, when told of the deception Mary had practiced upon Kathryn, became very angry and never forgave her daughter-in-law for it.

Mr. Randall was glad for the change which had been wrought in his daughter's life, and declared that he considered his son fortunate, indeed, to have won a girl who had proved herself so thoroughly capable of self-protection.

The numerous letters which Kathryn addressed to and received from Mary indicated that no greater friendship existed than the one between Mrs. Frank Ormsby and Mrs. Paul Randall.

THE END.

Of Interest to the People of the Hilltop and Vicinity

Volume XII — THE HILLTOP, COLUMBUS, OHIO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1929 — Number 44

Ice Co. Granted Site for Plant on Howard Ave.

City Council Ends Fight by Changing Zoning from Business to Industrial.

The fight sponsored by the City Ice and Fuel Co., for a site on the Hilltop suitable for the erection of an ice manufacturing plant was ended Monday night when city council changed the zoning of Howard avenue near the Big Four R. R. tracks from business to industrial district.

The company will build a plant for manufacturing ice to supply the Hilltop and a great part of the West Side. There were no objections to the location because of the absence of residences.

The ice company first asked for spot zoning to allow them to erect their plant in the rear of their present ice depot west of Hague avenue on Broad street. Objections filed by merchants and the efforts of the Hilltop Business Men's Association caused council to refuse the location.

On February 11 they asked council to change the zoning of the district on Carol avenue between Hague and Harris avenues but the protests of about seventy-five residents resulted in the disapproval by council.

The plant on the site near the Big Four tracks will be erected soon in order to take care of summer ice business.

In addition the following matters of interest to the Hilltop were acted upon by council Monday night:

Referred to safety committee request of L. G. Dolder for fire house at Hague and Sullivant avenues.

Referred to service committee request for sidewalks on Ryan avenue, Sullivant avenue to Mound street.

Young People Hold Meeting

Vesper Services of Glenwood Methodist Society Draw Youths' Viewpoints.

During the month of February, the young people of Glenwood church in their vesper services, have been trying to reach a definite decision as to whether or not religion is worth while, and if so, why. Their topics have dealt with such problems as "Is Religion Founded on Fear?"; "Is the Irreligious Man More Successful Than the Religious Man?" and "Is Religion a Matter of Penalties and Rewards?" The meetings have been well attended, and the discussions have proven to be interesting with practically everyone expressing frankly their own viewpoint on the various subjects.

Sunday evening at 6:30, they will have a "Finding" meeting and all the questions that have been discussed each Sunday evening during February, will again be brought up, and a conclusion reached.

These services are planned with the idea of giving the young people some real help in solving the problems of every day life. The questions which have been used have all been asked by members of the organization and there are other questions which will be used later, which have also been asked by the young people.

Water Floods Basement of Houses, Stores

Many Merchants Have Goods Damaged When Sewers Prove Inadequate.

Water following a heavy rain and the melting of snow on Monday resulted in many flooded basements on the Hilltop it was revealed Tuesday morning.

Merchants on West Broad street were hardest hit and several hundred dollars damage was done to goods stored in their basements. Basements of residents in the same vicinity and also near Sullivant avenue were flooded to various depths.

The resulting flood in the basement of the Piggly Wiggly grocery at Hague and Broad caused much damage to a stock of groceries that had been transferred from another store.

Nearly three feet of water poured into the basements of the block of stores on the north side of Broad street west of Hague avenue is the report of C. H. Campbell.

Four feet of water backed into the basement of Shaffer's Pharmacy at Burgess avenue and Broad street.

Several merchants and residents state that the fires under their heaters were extinguished by the rising water.

Knickerbocker Dry Cleaners, Columbian and Sullivant avenues had four feet of water. Others had the following: Charles E. Houx, Terrace and Broad, one foot; Haunts Grocery, Terrace and Broad, one and one-half feet; Broad-Warren Market, one foot; Rivoli Theatre, two feet; Hilltop Building and Loan, two feet.

Hamilton Market and Millikin Hardware Co., Sullivant and Eureka avenues explain that only surface water entered their basements because they have a screw plug that fits into the sewer head.

Branch Postoffice May Be Opened on Hilltop

Hilltop Business Men's Association Confers With Postmaster Regarding Station.

A postoffice may be established on the Hilltop in the near future if efforts of the Hilltop Business Men's Association are favored by postal authorities. The situation looked favorable after a committee from the association met with Postmaster Geren Monday.

Another branch station is to be established soon on the West Side to take care of the mail west of the river. The proposed station for the Hilltop will be known as a Classified Carriers station to have full postal facilities.

In a statement to Geren by the association it was pointed out that the branch would service 30,000 people in this community and cover a territory that has been developing rapidly in the past few years and which has much room for expansion on all sides.

One of the main points of interest to the postal authorities is the fact that the 15 carriers on the Hilltop would save 15 minutes each by not having to ride the street car from the station at its present location. This would mean about 30 hours per day.

It was also noted that the Hilltop is similar to a town in itself and is more than three miles from the post office.

The proposed station would probably be located near Hague avenue and Broad street because of the intersection of the two car lines.

The committee that called on Geren Monday was made up of R. G. Haunts, H. G. Butler, H. G. Deems and Wyatt L. Millikin.

CITY ATTORNEY TO ADDRESS B. M.

A committee composed of F. F. Green, H. Z. Kemp, H. G. Deems, R. D. Hastings and M. S. Acree is in charge of the meeting, and will notify the members.

Ask Fire Station Near Hague Ave.

Residents Ask Protection On Basis of Steady Growth of Community.

The steady growth of the section west of Hague avenue and near Sullivant avenue and the distance from a fire engine house has caused the residents of that neighborhood to ask that a fire station be established there in the near future. The nearest station is at Wheatland avenue and Broad street, two miles from their community, the residents point out.

The following letter was written by L. G. Dolder, 2815 Sullivant Ave., to Councilman John Lewis late last week:

Dear Mr. Lewis:

In behalf of the residents of the vicinity of Hague and Sullivant, am asking you to submit to Council, for the consideration of the members of the Council, the proposition of installing a fire department station west of Hague avenue on Sullivant. As you know, the territory near Hague and Sullivant has been developed a great deal within the last several years and is without adequate fire protection, as the closest fire department station is located at Wheatland and Broad.

Many thanks, indeed, for your co-operation in securing this protection for the people of this territory.

Respectfully,
L. G. Dolder.

Last year the girls won in a similar contest, and received a half holiday for a picnic.

Mr. Emsweiller, principal, held a meeting of the boys Thursday in the gym behind closed doors. Girls were taboo. The boys adopted as their slogan, "Watch Our Smoke."

At the same time the girls were meeting in the cafeteria under the direction of Miss Ganson and they adopted as their slogan, "Excuse Our Dust," because, to quote Miss Ganson, "we don't smoke."

THE TEACHER MUST HAVE PERSONALITY

A good teacher is one who has the ability to stimulate the desire to learn. That is the conclusion of Dr. Caswell Ellis, head of Cleveland College. Dr. Ellis experimented with a dozen different systems of education. At his direction a professor taught one subject one year in six different ways to different groups. In one class he used the lecture method, in another the quiz, in the third individual research, and so on. At the end of the year a check-up was made, and the conclusion was that all classes had fared alike. The system made no difference.

The important factor in a classroom is the personality of the teacher. If he (or she) can fire his class with enthusiasm for a subject, if he can make the subject interesting, if he can make study a lively activity, he will turn out boys and girls who will have no trouble in passing an examination.

Last year the women of the country spent over two billion dollars for their beauty. Is it any wonder that America has the most beautiful women of the world? Yes, the women paid and paid . . . for their good looks. It pays to look well and you pay to look well.

Advice to Young Girls

Don't rankle your taxicab guide with a sneer.
He may be a prosperous banker, my dear.
And smile on your ash man. It may be that he Is really a duke who'll invite you to tea.

* * * * *

Speaking of royalty, we can expect spring to be here for sure when we hear of the Prince of Wales taking his first spill of the open season.

* * * * *

The girl who is just naturally skinny is worrying over the new spring style that calls for a well rounded figure but for the plumper type it means more square meals and a demand for more sweets.

* * * * *

Now we have an ambition to have an iceberg near the South pole named after us.

* * * * *

When you take the girl friend out to dinner in the heart of winter and she tells you she has been used to cutting new tomatoes all winter, you begin wondering if you could ever get used to such a diet on your present salary.

* * * * *

Our idea of a journalist's heaven would be to have another good old muck raking period.

* * * * *

She was so dumb she thought Whistler was a canary bird.

* * * * *

Now that grand opera has passed, Columbus people will have to look forward to their entertainment from the legislature.

* * * * *

We wish spring would hurry up because our old canary is getting blind from looking out of the window at the snow, hence the darkness must have cut off his singing qualities, too.

* * * * *

Do you remember way back when you had to crank all morning to get the old Ford started? Lizzie isn't so stubborn now, though.

* * * * *

Now that the local high school principal has recommended a book of manners for his students we are half in the notion of starting a book store to supply the group.

* * * * *

An Ohio State professor has predicted buildings 150 stories in height and says they will be more or less common in the future but for our part we always did have a liking for the wide open spaces and we'll take the Alps for mountain climbing.

* * * * *

One must hand it to Lindy and Wales for their resistance when the sweet young things are just the type they happen to be these days.

* * * * *

One of the most welcome letters a person can receive is one from the old friend who encloses his check with a note saying he had forgotten the little bill and hopes all the folks are well.

Linguistic Lines

Three candidates qualify in the first week of Linguistic lines. We are sorry to disappoint anyone sending in a line but hope those who do not find their lines in this issue will endeavor to get in for publication next week.

For next week the key letter is "B." We fear our sample last week was too much for some who otherwise would have sent in a line, so this week we are omitting a sample. It is a good one and will appear along with the best ones next week. The field is open this week so send in your line. The rules are simple and are the same each week: See what kind of a sentence you can write, every word of which begins with the same letter. For next week we use B.

Here are the three best ones for this week: First—American apples, nu thorities agree, are appealingly appetizing, apparently appeasing awful acid attacks, and always attract active attention at any annual autumn apple appraisement. Not so bad Mary, not so bad.

Second—Any auditor, auditing annual arithmetical arrangements after accountants August appraisement always anticipates angry arguments about any accountant's approved and adjusted assets. We did not check up on the legal terminology in this last one but print it because it sounds all right. We urge Elizabeth to try again.

Three—Andy's academic advice about America, adorning an advertisement about America's annual autumn activities, always argues against America's arranging any annual autumn activities, and although Andy always argues against America's annual autumn activities, Andy always attends all annual autumn activities and assemblies. Very good Robert. Send us another one next week and also let us tell the people of the Hilltop who you are.

The PEOPLES COLUMN

LETTERS WELCOME

Your letter to the editor, expressing your thoughts and opinions on matters of interest to the Hilltop people will be printed in this column if you so desire.

TRAFFIC LIGHTS

Editor of the Record:

Perhaps the traffic light at Oakley and Broad street is very much needed but it's a little out of place.

The main trouble now is to keep the traffic in Broad street back of Oakley avenue in order to allow cars on the side street a chance to go forward into Broad street when the light changes.

Cars and street cars have been driving up to the middle of Oakley avenue outlet thus blocking the traffic for the side street. It seems that some marker should be placed there to let the people know where they are supposed to stop.

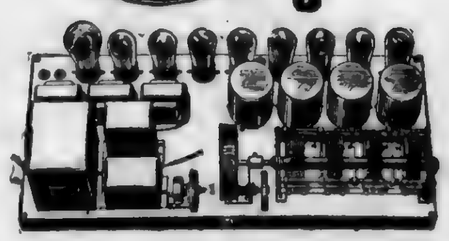
The OZARKA Radio

FOR seven years OZARKA, Inc., of Chicago has been making radios of distinctive quality!—the new 1929 MODEL is its most outstanding offer.

When you ask a friend which radio is the best, he knows because he has the best, but another friend says the same and his is a different make.

The more people you ask about radios the less real valuable information you have. Every radio is claimed to be the best, but you know that this cannot be possible.



There is only one sure and safe way to know that you are getting the best in radio. Conduct a real competitive test in your own home.

When you get through with such a test of many radios you'll know which is the actual leader today. You'll buy on actual results and not on reputation or what any one else says. The most agreeable part will be that you'll find results are not based on price—not by any means. You may pay more than an OZARKA will cost you for many radios but you will not get as much.

$149.50
in Walnut Cabinet with DYNAMIC Speaker

ELECTRIC
9 Tubes
Including
Rectifier

Price does not include tubes. Where is there a value in radio to compare with this? In many cases radios with ordinary cone speakers sell for more. Even many six and seven tube radios cost as much or more.

But let the results decide for you—be sure of this first. When would you like to have an OZARKA for a test in your home?

Religious Work Different Now Says Thompson

Mustn't Forget Post Graduate Courses, Says Educator; Nominations Made.

"We have reached the point when religious work must be intelligently done and colleges are even giving credit for work along these lines. There is a different conception of Sunday school now from that of a few years ago," said Dr. W. O. Thompson, president emeritus of Ohio State university, Sunday morning when he addressed Hoge Memorial Sunday school in connection with the annual Men's Day program.

"Now we pass from grade to grade in the Sunday school. But there are many who are graduated and quit without going to church. We must remember that modern churches like colleges are offering post graduate courses and there is always work to do," he continued.

In speaking of children he pointed out that 1000 could play together with fewer quarrels today than 100 could when he was a boy. "When we learn to play together we can do most anything together and play is as important as work."

The following committee was appointed to prepare for the Easter program of the Sunday school: Mrs. A. J. Corcoran, chairman; Mrs. Sawtelle, Shirley Umbenhauer, Ethel Humphreys, Emerson Bigony and Catherine Sperry.

Officers of the Sunday school to be elected Sunday morning will come from the following submitted by the nominating committee: superintendent, H. G. Desaig; assistant superintendent, T. C. Weir; secretary, Charles Shanely, R. O. Harrison; librarian, Alice Latham, W. C. Rickett; treasurer, Mrs. O. E. Spencer, Christy Michels.

Rivoli Theatre to Have Talkies

Widespread Approval of Vitaphone Causes Machine to Be Installed Soon.

Warner Brothers Vitaphone will be installed in the Rivoli Theatre, Broad and Oakley avenues in the near future George Pekrus, manager, announces.

The Rivoli in keeping with the recent widespread approval of the Vitaphone will show talkies and synchronized pictures to Hilltop people.

The first Vitaphone presentations were made in August 1926 and was developed by the Western Electric Co.

The Rivoli is one of the first community theatres to install this new entertainment feature.

Experiments have been carried on for many years in the development of talking pictures and all modern theatres at the present are installing the system. Hence there is a tremendous demand for the machinery.

The exact date of the installation of the machine in the Rivoli will be announced later. A story of how talkies are made will be published in the Record soon.

West High Boys Draw Design for Pennant

The efforts of Glen Grant and Louis Eichenlaub have been united to make the Alpha Omicron Delta pennant at West High school.

Grant drew the design which is a large T-square forming the base of an isosceles triangle, in the center of which are two protractors so arranged as to form the letters A. O. D. in the corners of the triangle W. H. S.

Eichenlaub conceived the idea of using this device as a pennant. It has been made up with white figures on a blue background.

The boys used this as their special project for admission to the Alpha Omicron Delta, high school drafting society.

WINS FORD SEDAN

Here is James O. White, 142 N. Ogden Ave., the winner of the new Ford Tudor sedan offered by the Hilltop Business Men's Association, standing beside the car he received Friday afternoon.

"I have lived on the Hilltop 14 years and 99 per cent of my dealings have been with Hilltop merchants." Mr. White made this statement when R. G. Haunts, president of the association handed the bill of sale for the car to him.

Mr. White is a thorough believer in alternate numbers because he has a new car today, won on an alternate number. The first number was not presented in the 28 days following the drawing held February 1.

Another time in his life he won a pistol, he told members of the advertising committee Friday. But he was fortunate enough to trade the gun for three pigs.

The car was a wedding anniversary gift, too. He received it just 41 years following his marriage. Mr. White is 71 years of age.

People are curious to know if the holder of the first alternate number was not a little uneasy for fear the winner would be presented. He explains that he didn't begin to get anxious until about a week ago but he lost no sleep over it.

In Transition Says Warden

Hoge Memorial Men's Club Hear P. E. Thomas of Ohio State Penitentiary.

We are living in a transitional age but we will work out of it, Warden P. E. Thomas of the Ohio State Penitentiary told the members of the Hoge Memorial Men's Club at their meeting Friday night at Hoge Memorial church.

In reference to the great number of criminals the warden stated that those who would be in the higher jails 30 years from now were not yet born." Therein lies a great responsibility for the American home. The ideals of the home life must be higher and we must stop teaching the children to get all they can and avoid the jail," he continued.

Two great things are needed to avoid crimes and lawbreaking in the future in the opinion of Thomas. They are liberalization of the law and lectures and teaching for children on how to respect the rights of others and the respect for public opinion.

"Iron bars and stone walls never held any man," he said in referring to the recent escape of four men from the penitentiary." There is no reason for dishonesty however on the part of the guards."

Boys' Club Organized on Hilltop Back in 1914 Continues to Live

The Olympian club was founded back in 1914 and the charter members were also members of the Leader class of Hoge Memorial church but even so the organization has continued to live and the same boys that made up the roll then attend its meetings now after having grown up and many of them married.

The boys, then four in number, met in a garage on South Warren avenue. After three months of this life they hold their meetings in the room on the second floor of the old saloon that stood next to the Voss Brothers building on Broad street. They met here for four years.

Charter members were "Ed" Reh, "Winnie" Moss, "Happy" Baird and Tom Merriman. T. A. Jones was teacher of the class of boys.

Requisites for membership most generally meant that the applicant must be a Sunday school member but no one church was specified. Character was one of the big points of admission and many hotly contested arguments resulted at election time when new names were submitted.

The third move of the club was to the room over the Hilltop Building and Loan office at South Park and Broad street. But now since the boys have grown older they have discontinued their regular meetings every week or every day, as they might decide, and now they meet every two months at the homes of the various members.

A meeting was held Saturday evening at the home of "Red" Schlottig, 90 N. Hague Ave., and was attended by about 18.

Sports of all kinds were participated in by the club and they had their own baseball, football and basket-ball teams.

In recalling some of the incidents in the life of the organization "Sherm" Edwards tells of the old swing the boys had outside the club rooms over the saloon. They made a rule that no girls were to be allowed in the swing. One day two members were caught swinging their young lady friends and consequently were fined 25 cents by the club, which, at the time, was a heavy financial burden.

Citizens Must Pick Officials Leach Explains

Government Reflects Citizenship, City Attorney Tells Hilltop Business Men.

"Government can't rise above the citizenship," Charles A. Leach, city attorney, told members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association at their meeting Tuesday night at the Matsonia. "Good government is the result of good citizenship."

"The development of the city rests on two factors," he continued. "They are the competent officials that are chosen and the citizenship back of them. The government is the least common denominator of the people. Show me a corrupted government and I will show you a lower class of people."

In commenting on the growth of the city he pointed out that such civic and business organizations as the Hilltop group have had a great part in the development.

"Few people attend the meetings of city council unless they have special interests of their own to look out for," he said.

Seek to Pick Out Semi-Deaf Children

Dr. Harvey Fletcher, of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, has stated that three million American school children are partially deaf. It is hard for one children to keep up with their classes, and in the future it will be hard for them to earn their livings. Medical attention for these children would prevent social and, economical loss. The officers of the American Federation of Leagues for the Hard of Hearing, co-operating with Bell engineers, have devised a simple method for picking these hard-of-hearing children from a large group in a short time.

The method involves "the use of the phonograph audiometer—a spring-driven turntable like that of an ordinary phonograph, an electromagnetic reproducer, and a group of telephone receivers. After the receivers have been distributed and properly adjusted, the children are told that they are about to hear numbers called, first by a woman and then by a man, who seem to be moving farther and farther away, so that the sounds will grow weaker and weaker. They are asked to write as many of these numbers as they can hear." After the test has been given twice, the receivers are changed to the left ears and the test is given twice more.

Rubber Growing In California

Before 1910 practically the entire rubber supply of the world came from wild sources, most of it from the Amazon valley, but efforts to change the situation and make the trees more accessible to rubber manufacturers have resulted in the cultivation of the guayule shrub, to be found in central and northern Mexico. This shrub does not require a tropical climate, but has been successfully grown in California, where 2,000 acres of it are now under cultivation.

A POST OFFICE FOR THE HILLTOP

Last week it was announced that a post office for the Hilltop might be realized if efforts of the Hilltop Business Men's Association were fruitful. Prospects for such an office really look good.

The growth of the West Side and especially the Hilltop has made an expansion of the postal facilities west of the river necessary and a larger room or another room will be needed to care for the growth.

The business men in trying to secure the office for the Hilltop point out that a classified carrier station here would be economical to both the Hilltop residents and the government. The 30,000 or more residents of this community make a small town in itself and should be better served.

The carrier station here will mean earlier deliveries and less time wasted by the carriers on street cars. The idea is a worthy one and should be furthered. The business men have been interested in the matter for several years.

ONE WAY OF INVESTING

Once upon a time a man decided to buy an automobile. He deposited $25 a week in the bank. It was a hard struggle, but he persisted. He worked overtime for his employer, and he took outside jobs. His ambition was to own a thoroughbred—a car that would talk language his neighbors would understand.

At the end of two years he had accumulated over $2500.

And so he dumped every penny of his two years' savings into a car that glistened like a banker's head and purred like a new electric sewing machine.

For a few weeks everyone was impressed. But soon they noticed the new car did not continue to glisten. Nor did it continue to purr. It accumulated dust and knocks.

The owner was weary. His energy and his ambition were exhausted. He had the car, but he couldn't afford to keep it clean or in repair—let alone go anywhere in it.

The man was guilty of what is known among graduates of correspondence schools as "inharmonious distribution of expenditure."

When the spring thawing begins there is also a chance of some pocketbooks thawing out to the extent that the bill collector may get an increase in salary.

One of those things that is lowered in your estimation is the beautiful printed picture after you see the original. The same is true of people after you have known them awhile longer.

HERE and THERE

By C. C. H.

The religious forum to be held in Columbus, March 12, goes to show that religion is no longer held as a secret by those who adhere to one creed. The Agnostic, the Jew, the Catholic and the Protestant all have something to contribute and each will believe as he does now after the debate is over.

We notice that some of the fleece of the March lamb has been falling.

The prison-for-a-pint-bill will make more lawbreakers and soon the point will be reached when the number of laws will make a lawbreaker of everyone.

* * * * *

Our idea of a nest for the wide open spaces is when a person tries to write something and has for inspiration a view of the side of a brick building and falling snow, when spring should be in the air.

A local business man reports that he doesn't like to cut away from home so our conclusions are that he doesn't do his own cooking.

Now that the new telephone directory is out it should provide many pleasant evenings at home for some who wonder if their friends still have their phones or if any new ones have been installed.

A look at the cases filed in divorce courts shows that this particular thing happens to be in the big business class, too. Furthermore, it is no longer a matter for wives only; husbands have found it profitable to sue their mothers-in-laws.

And then there was the Scotchman who wouldn't use the self-starter on his car because it would run the battery down.

The banker who made $33,000,000 in one day on his stocks brings us to realize that money is such a common thing with some and they have so much that some new system of figures will have to be arranged for in order to explain how much they really are worth. The numbers are getting too big to read.

One must hand it to Herb for being so conservative with the cash spent for his big show. The few thousands of dollars went a long way toward entertaining the inquisitive Americans and made the hotel keepers of Washington happy for a period.

When the Elements Conspire

Linguistic Lines

Linguistic Lines show increased interest during the second week. A cash prize of One Dollar will be offered for the best line sent in before Monday, March 7. For next week the key letter is "C." So "C"end in your lines and "C" if you "C"an win a Dollar.

Our sample for this week is, "British buddies, battling bravely before Bombay, bend briskly beneath battle bombardment; but bravely brush back brutal barbarians beyond Bombay's bloody bulwarks."

Here are the best ones that came in.

First—"Busily buzzing bees, bending beneath beeswax burdened bodies, buzz briskly beneath bending blossoms, bravely battling buzzing, beeswax burdened bumble bees, because bumble bees by bearing bigger beeswax burdens become badly beaten, battling busy, buzzing bees."

We acknowledge that this one beats the sample for the week and although the author did not sign a name, we suspect it came from one of last week's contributors.

Second—"Ben Bold, being badly battered by boxing badly, began boxing better by boxing better boxers between bouts, because by boxing badly, Ben began being bitterly berated, besides betting became bad by Ben's bad boxing."

This one evidently came from some one with pugilistic knowledge if not experience. It was signed "Ben." Why not make it "Battling Ben Bold?"

Third—"Baltimore's bathing beauties, basking blissfully beneath brilliant bunting banners blush because Boston's bathing beauties, by banishing brilliant bunting banners, become better bathing beauties."

Short but sweet Betty. We would like to go and judge this for ourselves. Let us hear from you again this week.

TODAY'S DUTY FIRST

Agnostic, Jew, Catholic and Protestant to Speak at Columbus Forum

Clarence Darrow — Rabbi Jacob Tarshish — Judge John P. McGoorty — Bishop E. H. Hughes

Without precedent in Ohio, is the March 12th forum to be held in Memorial Hall. Four nationally known speakers, authoritative representatives of their respective creeds, will have 30 minutes each, for a discussion of their beliefs. Clarence S. Darrow, America's foremost criminal lawyer will tell why he is an agnostic. Rabbi Jacob Tarshish of Temple Israel, Columbus, will discuss "Why I am a Jew." Judge John P. McGoorty of the Superior Court of Chicago will speak on "Why I am a Catholic." Bishop Edwin H. Hughes of the Methodist Episcopal church will state why he is a Protestant. The order of their appearance will be determined by lot, immediately preceding the forum which starts at 8:15 p. m. Tuesday, March 12.

Advance reservations for the four-cornered forum are being made at Heaton's Music Store, 33 E. Long St., Columbus. Mail orders, with stamped and addressed envelopes, accompanied by checks made payable to George G. Whitehead, forum director, will be honored promptly, on a basis of $1.50 and $1.00 for main floor seats, and $1.50, $1.00 and 75c for balcony reservations. The box office sale at Heaton's will open March 7.

Homemaking Taught American Indians

From the office of Indian Affairs of the Department of the Interior all Indian superintendents have received instructions concerning home-making lessons in the day schools of the Indian reservations. The housekeeper in all such schools is to give a half hour each day to home-making instruction for girls in the first and second grades. Girls in grades from the third to the sixth are to receive one hour's instruction each day. Girls over ten in the first and second grades will do third and fourth grade home-making work. The day-school housekeeper is to visit the homes of her community in order to be thoroughly familiar with conditions and in order to give her assistance in making improvements. The lessons must not be beyond the age of the girls or beyond their home conditions; the girls are to learn by doing. Every effort must be made to instill into them right habits of living.

Weekly News Paper Issued for Blind

A magazine called the Weekly News is being published each week in Boston. The pages of this magazine would be meaningless to a seeing person, for it is written in Braille. But to the blind it opens a new world. Mr. Francis B. Ierardi, blind worker for Massachusetts Division of the Blind, himself able to see nothing of the world, conceived the idea. It is he who does most of the writing for the magazine, which he publishes with the help of a staff of ten, half of them blind. Financed privately, the Weekly News is sent free to its 650 subscribers. The hope of the editor is that the magazine may become "a national weekly in every sense of the word."

A new Williamsburg is to rise out of the Williamsburg of today—a replica of the famous Virginia town as it was in the eighteenth century. Rev. William Goodwin, pastor of the Williamsburg Old Bruton church, used to picture to himself Duke of Gloucester street as it must once have been. At one end still stands William and Mary, the oldest college in the United States. One of its buildings was designed by Sir Christopher Wren. Other eighteenth-century buildings—the old courthouse, the prison, a tiny brick store, handsome residences—stand beside gasoline stations and chain stores. Dr. Goodwin conceived a plan of moving modern buildings to side streets, restoring old building, and reproducing those which were missing. Through the generosity of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., the old-new town between the James and York rivers will be completed in about five years. It is believed that Williamsburg will "draw visitors from all over the world, and give to them not only a greater understanding of the past but strength and inspiration."

Infant Mortality Rate Was Lowest in 1927

The Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor has announced that the infant mortality rate for 1927 was the lowest on record. More than one million infants and pre-school children and more than 100,000 mothers were cared for by means of the various health activities carried on in the states which co-operated under the Sheppard-Towner Maternity and Infancy Act during that year. Forty-five states have now joined in the work. Miss Grace Abbott, chief of the Childrens' Bureau, said: "The value of parental education in the scientific care of children cannot be adequately measured by the lowered death rate. Children are not only kept alive but are in far better general physical condition as a result of better care."

HEALTH SECRETS

More and more we are learning to rely upon nature, rather than upon medicines, for health. If we all followed nature's laws, most of our serious diseases would disappear. Certainly the so-called "diseases of civilization"—affections of the heart and nervous system—would be abolished. Sunlight, fresh air, exercise, right food, avoidance of worry, and the prompt repair of any injury or defect—these are practically all anyone needs to maintain perfect health.—Dr. Fred H. Albee in the American Magazine.

Osage Indians Get Oil Royalty

Oil rights on 100,000 acres of Osage Indian land in Oklahoma were sold at auction some time ago. The law provides that one tenth of such oil land be leased for its oil content each year, the proceeds to go to the Indians on a per capita basis. In addition, the Osage Indians receive a royalty from all oil produced on the lands at the rate of about one-sixth of its value. It is understood that the land reverts to the Indians in 1946.

Lecturer Coming to West March 19

Frederick D. Losey, Shakespearean Interpreter to Give Recital in Auditorium.

Frederick D. Losey, educator, lecturer, and Shakespearean interpreter will give a lecture and a recital in the new auditorium at West High Tuesday, March 19.

He will give a lecture on Macbeth called 'Inevitability of Consequence," during registration on this date for the students in the school and in the evening, "A Recital of Macbeth."

The charge for this will be 15 cents at registration and 25 and 35 cents in the evening.

Professor Losey, after sixteen years of teaching, left the university and became an author and lecturer. He has just completed a new edition of Shakespeare's complete works, published by John C. Winston Company, of Philadelphia. Meantime he has been in almost constant demand by schools, colleges, teachers' institutes and study clubs for lectures and recitals.

Lenten Self Denial Promotes Nutrition

To many people Lenten self-denial has become not only a matter of principle, but also a matter of health.

For when Hot Cross Buns were eaten only on Good Friday, self-denial often entailed the danger of loss of nourishment. But, nowadays, when everyone eats Hot Cross Buns right through the forty days of Lent, the danger is ended. People who previously would have been afraid to carry out their principles now do so without fear, knowing that the rich nourishment of Hot Cross Buns will amply supply their needs.

Of course, some will say that people who practice self-denial in one thing and indulge in something else are not really practising self-denial at all. But the fact is that everyone, whether he holds to the self-denial principle or not observes the tradition of eating Hot Cross Buns during Lent. Indeed, due to their religious implications, those who believe in self-denial have even greater reasons of principle to eat Hot Cross Buns, than those who do not believe in it. Therefore the Hot Cross Bun custom actually increases Lenten self-denial. For it gives less excuse among those who believe in it, not to carry their principle out, and it makes many who do not believe in the principle practice it for health's sake.

THE ROBINS' CONCERT

The robins gave their last concert of the season the other morning for the fairies.

Reserved Seats

They give many concerts every year, always after they have just arrived for the summer and many, many after that.

Their first concert, is one of the biggest events of the spring in fairyland, and they are so excited about it for days ahead that they can talk about nothing else.

They practice so hard and so long for their concerts and for this last one they had been practicing far into the day, some little robin trying over and over again some important trill which he was going to sing alone.

But the concert was given just at dawn. Mr. Sun came out for it, looking as fine as any king with a very dazzling golden crown on his head.

Then the dewdrops came and had reserved seats on the little blades of grass.

Some of the late butterflies were invited, and the little last autumn garden flowers opened their sleepy eyes and waved about, keeping time with the music.

The first of all was the grand opening chorus. Mr. Robin Redbreast had a little stick with which he beat time, and all the robins sang a fine song which he had made up.

Then came the solos. Miss Robin Redbreast sang a beautiful song all by herself.

Then two little brother robins sang a song together—they called it a "duet," and it was a very funny song.

They acted as they sang, and made all the fairies and the other guests at the concert laugh hard.

The best of all was the band. It was a new band the robins had just started, and they were very proud of it.

It was a great surprise to the fairies, for they didn't know the robins had a band.

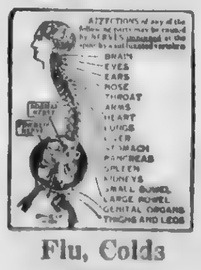
As you can guess, the robins had worked hard for a big surprise for the fairies.

Ten little robins played the drums, which were tiny twigs from the apple tree. There were little leaves through which some of the others whistled tunes, and the rest played on horn-shaped flowers.

All by Herself

After the concert was finished and the fairies had clapped and clapped and waved their wands with delight, and the little robins had bowed and bowed—and fallen down, sometimes, making too low bows—they all had breakfast.

Such a breakfast!



The most luscious of worms were given the little robins and a special dish was made for the fairies of spring porridge, which Grandmother Robin had made, and which the fairies called "Delicious."

What a Relief!

A traveling man put up one night in a cheap little hotel, where the thin partitions of a range of bedrooms, like the stalls of a stable, stopped halfway to the ceiling. And in the stilly watches of the night he lay awake and listened to the finest demonstration of plain and fancy snoring that it had ever been his fate to hear. It was full of sudden and awful variations. Sometimes strangulation seemed imminent, then in the middle of a fantasia the agony stopped suddenly, and there was silence.

From a near-by room he heard a voice exclaim wearily, "Thank goodness! He's dead."

Much Waste Caused By Food Prejudices

Doctor Charles W. Townsend, of Ipswich, Massachusetts, has made some interesting statements concerning food prejudices, which he declares, exist in all parts of the world and cause a great amount of waste, since nourishing foods are thrown away by the ton as "not fit to eat." One example Dr. Townsend gives is the following: "On both the American and European sides of the Atlantic Ocean two shellfish are common: the soft-shelled clam, and the edible mussel. The species of these two mollusks are the same on both sides of the water. In Europe, mussels are eaten freely but not clams, while the reverse is the case on the American side. This prejudice extends back to prehistoric times, for while clamshells abound here in ancient shell heaps, and mussel shells are merely accidental, in Europe the exact opposite is the case." The sole and the flounder are considered delicate eatin in this country and in England; the people of Newfoundland and Labrador refuse to touch them. Food prejudices abound among savages, children, and ignorant persons, and are found even among the educated.

Questionnaire Is Sent to Parents

Those Living North of Broad Asked for Views Concerning Highland Traffic Question.

A questionnaire went out to all the parents of Highland Avenue school children living north of Broad street revealed that the parents are evenly divided as to arrangements desired for their children in getting across the street at school time.

The first group was made up of whose children are large enough to look after themselves with the aid of the traffic light and are therefore satisfied.

The other group consisted of those who prefer to have a pupil safety patrol organized by the Automobile Club. The matter is being allowed to rest for a time though pending efforts to have a policeman stationed nearby to help the children across the street.

Mrs. Oscar Born, 236 S. Harris Ave., entered her children, age 9 and 10, at John Burroughs school Monday on condition that she be permitted to keep them out of school during bad weather. The children have been out of school this semester following the change of zoning because West Broad school is but a few blocks from their home and John Burroughs is eight blocks away.

Several students have taken solo flights recently and all those enrolled from now until March 15 will solo in May.

West Alumni Have Special Occident Issue

West High school alumni members recalled their old school days when they issued a special number of the "Occident" for the alumni members along with the regular paper of the school last Friday.

Subscription price of the paper was free to all members of the association in good standing. Additional copies at 15 cents each. To non-members of the association one dollar per copy—which included a year's membership in the association.

The paper had four pages of six columns and was edited by Claude C. Skeates, '20. Joe Fodey, '22, was business manager.

A history of the alumni association is given by James Williams, '27. Miles V. Hoover, '19, president of the council outlined the administration in which he explains that the council is made up of two representatives of each graduating class.

Art work in the issue consists of pictures of the old West High building on Central avenue, the baseball team of 1913, Occident staffs of 1912 and 1915, football team of 1912, basket-ball champions of 1916 and baseball champions of 1918.

The editor publishes an article from the Occident of December, 1914, showing the price of coal to be $4.00 per ton; car tickets nine for 25 cents; house rent $20 per month, and gas 30 cents per 1000 cu. ft. A contrast shows that slight changes have taken place.

W. E. Ferguson, '12, chairman of the membership drive points out that the association has been organized since 1911 but is yet very young and has much chance for growth.

An article by Claude C. Skeates, '20, secretary of "W" Alumni Association tells of the activities of the organization of athletes and lauds the spirit of West High.

The alumni membership is at present more than 300 and is headed by the class of 1928 with 47 active members.

S.O.S. Girls in Much Distress When School Law is Handed Out

West High school almost had a sorority early this week. But the organization refused to function properly because of objections of school officials to the effect that the world would move on just as well and so would West High school without the proposed girls' organization.

The S. O. S. girls—they were to be. And so when the older members of the group met last Wednesday they elected nine of the younger girls of the school to membership and formulated an initiation program that would attract attention and advertise their sorority in real style.

On Monday morning the nine young ladies appeared on the scene wearing red hair ribbons and red ties with their white middies. A light and a dark stocking helped to make the outfit complete. Furthermore no cosmetics were present and each girl carried a goodly supply of chewing gum for her superiors. This also added to the trials of the teachers in class rooms. Of relief to some of the boys about school was the fact that the pledges were to be allowed no dates during the whole week.

A collection of the hair ribbons was made on Monday by the school author ties and the girls proceeded to receive several lectures from the powers that be. Said they, there is no such thing as a high school sorority. They are against the law and the club would therefore have to be known as a club and initiation tactics would have to cease.

One girl of the group when interviewed stated that she held on to her ribbon because she had paid a perfectly good 49 cents for it.

And so a good possibility of a sorority at West High has practically vanished and has now become a club so far as the school is concerned. But the girls state they have enjoyed their adventure and are only sorry for the school because there is a law prohibiting sororities.

The S. O. S. might truly appear as a distress signal at present.

Lineman Burnt By Live Wire

Hilltop Man Will Lose Four Fingers After Grasping 6000-Volt Carrier.

Alfred D. Herzel, 35, 171 S. Burgess Ave., is in University hospital and will probably lose four fingers after being burned by a high tension wire Friday evening at Summit street and Chittenden avenue. Latest word from the hospital was that he is able to talk but not to receive visitors. His condition is improved but continues to be serious.

Herzel, a lineman, had his hands scorched to the bones when he grasped a bare wire carrying 6000 volts, as he was repairing an open street lighting circuit.

As he swung from the wire he screamed for help. Spectators below stood helpless and watched while Ray Thrash, 1054 Thomas Ave., another municipal lineman, attempted to rescue Herzel. This was not accomplished however until No. 7 engine house crew was called. The safety belt was finally cut.

'Better Than Horse?'

One of the most novel displays of the Hilltop this week is that of the Hilltop Furniture Co. A statue like horse is shown in the window surrounded by straw. The sign below the horse reads, "Are you as good as a horse?" The explanation is that it takes 75 cents per week to bed a horse or $390 for 10 years. One of the mattresses on display costs on an average of five cents per week for the ten-year period.

One Way Parking Plan Approved By City Council

Ordinance Restricts Parking to West Side of S. Oakley, S. Park and S. Eureka Aves.

City council voted Monday night to prohibit parking on the west side of Oakley, South Park and Eureka avenues from Broad street 30 feet south. The ordinance will go into effect April 11.

Traffic has been found to be very congested in these districts and makes auto driving dangerous due to the narrow streets which are usually lined with autos on both sides. Several accidents have occurred on these streets in the past year. When the streets are lined with parked cars it is also impossible to get a fire engine through.

Councilman Floyd Green, 3046 Crescent Dr., sponsored the motion.

War On Light Runners

A war was started early this week by motorcycle policemen to enforce the law by tagging motorists who run through the red light at Oakley avenue and Broad street. More than 20 were caught within less than three hours.

In council the matter of sidewalks for Powell avenue past the new West High school was approved. The walks will be built on both sides of the street. This will relieve the traffic of the section and reduce the accident hazards.

Council referred to the Utilities Committee a complaint that 10-minute car service on Sullivant avenue is inadequate. It was asked that the cars be run more regularly in Broad street on the Camp Chase line to the Big Four tracks.

West High Student Writes Team Song

Feeling that a new school song might aid in developing school spirit at West High a call was issued for a "new" school song and Virginia Miller, '31, came to the rescue with the following team song which will soon appear in sheet music.

Come on you Cowboys, you've got to win,
Come on you Cowboys, you've got the vim.
We're all behind you to help remind you,
That you must—must
Beat that team.
You meet them squarely and play them fairly,
And we'll win for West High school.

SEASONABLE DISHES

Let me have a chance for the ordinary method of cooking chickens and try this:

Chicken Gumbo

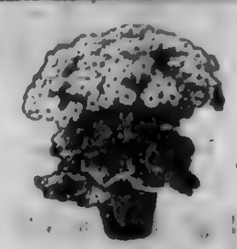
Cook one medium sized onion finely chopped with four tablespoonfuls of butter, stirring constantly. Add one quart of chicken stock to which has been added one-half of a can of okra, two teaspoonfuls of salt, one-fourth tablespoonful of pepper, and one-half a green pepper chopped. Bring to the boiling point and simmer forty minutes.

Tomato Soup

Cook one can of tomatoes with two cupfuls of water, two slices of onion, twelve peppercorns, four cloves, a bit of bay leaf and two tablespoonfuls of sugar, twenty minutes. Force through a puree strainer and add one teaspoonful of salt and one-eighth teaspoonful of soda. Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter, add three tablespoonfuls of flour and stir until well blended, then pour on gradually the hot tomato, stirring constantly. Simmer for five minutes then strain.

Potatoes Au Gratin

Take small sized new potatoes; there should be two cupfuls cooked. Mix one-third of a cupful of grated cheese with one and one-half cupfuls of rich white sauce and stir in the potatoes. Put into a well buttered baking dish, season well and cover with buttered crumbs, at least a half inch covering. Serve when the crumbs are well browned.



Fruit Cream

Soak one tablespoonful of gelatin in one-fourth a cup of cold water, dissolve in one-fourth of a cupful of scalded milk and add one-half cupful of sugar and one teaspoonful of lemon juice. Strain and set in a pan of ice water, stir constantly and when the mixture begins to thicken, add the whites of two eggs and one-half pint of heavy cream beaten stiff, one-third of a cupful of stewed prunes cut in pieces, three figs finely chopped and two tablespoonfuls of blanched and chopped almonds. Moisten and chill.

A Modernistic Kitchen Calls For a Modernistic Apron

Of course if one is having a modernistic kitchen done in bright yellows, greens, reds or blues, as most every housewife is these days, the next step is to complete the color symphony with the wearing of a modernistic apron-smock like the one in the picture.

When Dame Fashion created this charming kitchen frock or apron, she wrote modernistic-futuristic design and color all over it. This unique model is worth noting not only because of its color and design, but a chief point of interest is the fact that it is made of rubberized silk, hand-pulinged in striking modernistic design which panels it from neck to hemline down the front. It is very practical, this rubberized silk.

If, perhaps, you do not quite fancy silk for kitchen wear, even if rubberized to the point of practicability, then take this hint—make a gay patchwork apron out of "leftovers" of gingham and chambray and such. That is, sew this and that gay little scrap together after the manner of "crazy-quilt" patterning. The front panel in the apron here pictured might be used as a guide. Use patchwork made in this wise for pockets, belts, yokes and bindings and there you have it—a modernistic kitchen apron! They're new, these patchwork aprons. Lots of fun to make them, too, and being so thoroughly unique they make extremely clever Christmas gifts.

If you are not interested in kitchen aprons, perhaps you would like to hear about certain cunning bridge-party aprons. You make them of white organdie, designing card suits of a contrasting color, as hearts, appliqued in red and so on.

It is the way of most aprons in the new holiday collections which are being shown to revel in riotous color. Then, too, they are most intricately and wonderfully shaped with fouffant side panels which accomplish tiers of ruffle or fullness of some sort.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

THE "CALENDAR"

"Calendar," the word which designates the chart by which we reckon and arrange the divisions of the year into months, weeks and days, has a story in its name.

It comes to us from the Latin "kalenderium," an account book, which goes back to "calends" or "kalends"—and there we have the story.

The Romans made a threefold division of the month into Kalends, Nones and Ides. The "Ides of March" is familiar to every reader of Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar." In certain months the Nones fell on the 7th, the Ides on the 15th; in other months the Nones came on the 5th, the Ides on the 13th. But the Kalends came always on the 1lth of the month.

Since the first and most important division of the year is its charting into months, each of which began with the Kalends, the evolution of the word "calendar" is easily comprehensible.

AGE AND OBSERVATION

Favorite remarks at various ages:
At fifteen: "Let's go!"
At twenty: "Give me a chance and I'll show 'em."
At twenty-five: "It's all wrong. There must be a reform."
At thirty: "I'll live to see the dawn of a new day. In a few years the people will wake up and demand their rights."
At thirty-five: "I'd be rich if I'd stayed single."
At forty: "I'm sick of reformers."
At forty-five: "What of it?"
At fifty: "Thank God I've got a good bed."
At fifty-five: "The human race isn't worth saving."
At sixty: "I believed that once."
At sixty-five: "It won't work."
At seventy: "The world has changed."

HOW MUCH ARE YOU SAVING?

The following are the savings a noted economist says a man should make:

Income	Month	Year	Percentage
$ 2,500	$ 20	$ 240	9.6
3,000	35	420	14.0
3,500	45	540	15.4
4,000	55	660	16.5
5,000	81	975	19.5
7,500	175	2,100	28.0
10,000	267	3,204	32.0
15,000	575	6,900	46.0
25,000	1,041	12,500	50.0

If you will look for your own place in this table and find the amount he expects you to save, as we have done, you will probably decide that is unreasonable (as we have). But save all you can and, as Arthur Brisbane says, don't gamble.

The Hilltop doesn't have a Rotary club, but the school is willing that they should be represented at the Rotary dinner. If there be some of the faith of Sinclair Lewis perhaps the matter will be looked into.

The Fostoria editor seems to have the right idea when he says that what we need is more permanent wives and less permanent waves. We agree in every respect but that of the waves. Perhaps if there were more husbands who would give the wife the price of the wave she would become more of a fixture.

Would You?

If you were a stranger, far from home
Discouraged perhaps, and sad and lone,
Would you be happy to hear someone say,
With a kindly smile and a cheerful way,
"My friend and brother, how do you do?"
I know I'd be glad if 'twere me, would you?

If you were bearing a heavy load,
And struggling along a wearisome road,
Wouldn't you just feel your burden grow light
And the world around you seem suddenly bright,
If someone should whisper "I'll help you through,"
I know I'd be glad if 'twere me, would you?

As you travel your path along life's way,
And your heart is happy, light and gay,
Look all around you, find ones in need,
And brighten their lives by some good deed,
That will help them to stand more firm and true,
I know I'd be glad then, and happy, would you?

Wanted: A Mother for Our Country.

What About Her?

A man without a country . . . another one was found last week and books have been written about them from time to time. The father of our country . . . the small child of school age will relate the story from the episode of the cherry tree to the first inauguration ever held in this country. But little has been said of the mother of our country.

That there was one there can be little doubt but as to the exactness of who this person might be, much is yet to be said and probably little to be accomplished. However it may prove interesting to look about for one.

Credit supposedly might be given to Mrs. Washington through the fact that she possessed much influence over George and may have been partly responsible for him becoming the father of his country.

But the little consideration given women in the days when our forefathers were gaining their independence leads us to believe that the people of the country at that time would have hardly thought it necessary for the nation to have a mother. It would have detracted from the fatherly aspect as they then saw it.

Another way of considering the matter is from the angle that the country needs a modern mother. Mothers are generally becoming so today. Revealing authors have sought to modernize Washington by bringing his name into print with stories of scandals they supposed he must have figured in. And so we prefer to leave Martha, wife of George, a pleasingly curious Colonial lady.

Mother of 26

The fact that Sir William Phipps was one of a family of 26 children by the same mother might be said to place his mother in line for the nomination to the post. However, the honor should be given to that lady who has served her native country to the extent that the public now choose to honor her by giving her this distinguished title, not on the basis of child rearing but rather from the standpoint of the part she has played in a national way.

The important part played by women in the affairs of the nation today offer a large and extensive field from which to choose one who has become a national figure in recent years or holds the spotlight of fame in her present life.

The Women's Movement

We choose the present day woman for this position because only since the enactment of the nineteenth amendment and hence the noticeable women's movement that has been so prevalent lately, have women been particularly active in a national sense.

If you were asked what woman you considered the logical person for the honor, perhaps your answer would be delayed. Perhaps you would smile and ask to be excused because you had always thought of national affairs in terms of men.

And so we nominate a few and offer reasons accordingly as they have held a part in our national affairs.

A Candidate

Properly speaking a woman for this position should be one who has figured in women's rights and gained for them the position they now hold. With such in mind who would be better suited than one whose name suggests an ancestry that has been associated with bettering living conditions . . . Fanny Garrison Villard, daughter of America's famous reformer, William Lloyd Garrison.

With a life devoted to woman suffrage, international peace, negro betterment, prison reform and the spread of music, Mrs. Villard is outstanding as a woman that is known from coast to coast and abroad.

When a girl she helped her father edit the Liberator, his famous militant weekly. In so doing she met the leaders of the abolitionist movement. These included John Brown, Wendell Phillips, George Thompson, Lydia Maria Childs and others. Furthermore, she met her future husband during the Civil War when he came to their home as a war correspondent for the New York Herald-Tribune and Henry Villard was said to have been a particularly brave and fearless one.

Well Suited Marriage

Their marriage proved to be well suited since her husband shared many of her progressive views. He died in 1900 and thereafter Mrs. Villard gave her whole time to the woman suffrage cause which was at that time a question of national importance and gaining strength from congress to congress.

The next movement after winning suffrage into which Mrs. Villard was to become prominent, was the founding of the Women's Peace Society, in which she devoted her attention to permanent peace.

In addition she was for forty-eight years, manager of the New York Diet Kitchen and was on the board of several hospitals and day nurseries. The Hudson River Music Settlement was also a personal attachment in which she took much interest.

Her contributions in an educational way are found in her part in the appeal for the establishment of Barnard college and the fact that she was a director and trustee of the American College for Women at Constantinople.

That she commanded respect and contributed much is witnessed in the innumerable hosts of friends and admirers and unseen friends she left behind following her death on July 5, 1928.

Besides a cook it is necessary in Central Africa to have a plate washer and pot washer.

A resident whose dog had been accidentally drowned heard sounds of sobbing during the night, and on inquiring what was amiss he was told that the plate washer was crying because the dog was dead.

Deeply touched, the master went to the boy and asked him if he had loved the dog very dearly.

"No," was the reply; "but who will now lick the plates clean for me?"

Linguistic Lines

Can't Columbus citizens construct curious combinations?

Just think of it, a sentence as simple as the above one would have been worth a dollar to the writer if it had been presented at the Record office by Monday evening. The letter, "C" seemed to stump linguistic line enthusiasts last week. Just one sample was submitted and as much as we would have liked to award the author the prize the sentence failed to comply with the rules. We restate the rules for the benefit of this young writer and want to encourage him to try again. Construct a simple, complex or compound sentence, every word of which begins with the same letter of the alphabet. We have used A, B and C. Just to make the competition keener we throw the alphabet open and will allow you to use any letter you choose for next week. The award of One Dollar will be made on the basis of the number of words and the grammatical unity of the sentence. So let your offering come in. It's simple when you try. Just take a word like "Carrie" and start writing about her like this. Considering Carrie's customary carelessness, can Carrie carry carefully canned country currants carefully?

Why We Do What We Do

By H. K. THOMSON, Ph. D.

WHY WE WINDOW SHOP

The obvious reasons for window shopping are the attractiveness of the display, getting a line on the things we are thinking of buying, and the quest for bargains. The shopkeepers make it worth our while to look around.

Other reasons why we window shop are not so apparent. Contrary to the purpose of the display, we get our satisfaction in seeing the things in the window and hence do not need to purchase them. Our imagination helps us to appropriate everything we look at. We are truly monarch of all that we survey. What necessity is there of owning the thing if we can see it in the window? What more could we do with it at home? This is true of works of art.

Another way in which the window display prevents our buying is that we see so many good things that we cannot make up our minds which one to buy. Every good salesman knows that the more specimens he shows the more difficult it is to make a sale. The prospective buyer is bewildered and hesitates. It is so much easier to choose between two than between a hundred. An experienced clerk will size up his customer and bring him exactly what he wants. He resorts to showing other things only when the customer appears to contemplate leaving the store. The moment we make a purchase we then own only one. Ever afterwards we lose our claim to the rest. When we look in the window we feel that we must be loyal to the one we have purchased, and this gives us a feeling of detachment.

We window shop because it is a cheap and pleasant pastime. We are attracted by the beauty and cleverness of the display, we gather new ideas of values, we come to know the latest fads and fashions, and above all, to appropriate all of them without money and without price.

"Doris is getting a man's wages."

"Yes, I knew she was married."

Breathless Hunter.—"Say, boy, did you see a fox run by here?"

Boy.—"Yes, sir."

Hunter.—"How long ago?"

Boy.—"It'll be a year next Christmas."

He.—"You're next. Haircut or shampoo?"

She.—I really don't know just yet. I'm looking about a bit. I may be back later."

Marjorie is two-thirds married to Willard.

Really?

Yes, she's willing and the preacher is willing.

Doing Research Work

She—What are you doing these days, George?

He—Oh, I've gotta job doing research work.

She—How's that?

He—Well, you see, the sheriff stops the cars and looks for liquor. I am a little farther down the road and I research them.

What could be sadder than a man without a country.

A country without a man.

When a man is all wrapped up in himself, he makes a very small package.

The PEOPLES COLUMN

AN ECHO FROM THE SOUTH

Tampa, Florida.

Editor of Record:

We thought some of our friends may be interested to hear from us and to know that we have recovered from our illness. It is needless to say that the weather here is fine and the climate is wonderful. The people here, however, say that this winter has been unusually cool. We have had some nights when the temperature dropped to about 45 degrees but it would soon warm up. I do not recall a day that the sun did not shine out a part of the time.

Tampa is a fine city and claims to be the largest city in the state. The Southern Florida Fair held here was wonderful in its exhibits of fruits, vegetables, flowers, poultry and many other things that we cannot here describe.

An engine belonging to the Seaboard Line that weighed 133 tons attracted much attention.

There are quite a number of Columbus people here and many from Ohio.

We are located just a square from the beautiful Plant Park. In this park is the Tampa Bay Hotel, one of the largest and most finely equipped hotels in the city.

We find the people here very friendly and kind, devoid of any sectional feeling, and this spirit is shown by a monument in Plant Park. This monument is a great gun mounted on a fine granite foundation. The gun was made for the protection of Tampa in 1898 and erected in memory of the soldiers of the Spanish war. Its location is the spot where Roosevelt's Rough Riders had headquarters. On one section is sculptored the bust of Admiral Dewey, of Manilla fame. On another, the old familiar slogan, "Remember the Maine."

But what made the most impression on me was this: "This war brought the Blue of the cold bleak North, and the Gray of the sunny South into great Brotherhood, and liberty to an opressed people."

We are expecting to spend a short time in St. Petersburg and hope to be home by Easter.

After March 1, our address will be 941 Grandville St., St. Petersburg, Florida.

—Rev. and Mrs. P. W. Drumm

SPANISH TERM

In southwestern United States the Spanish term "hacienda" is used for a productive establishment in the country for farming or stock raising. It is a landed estate, one especially on which the owner resides.

HOUSE A HOME FIRST

A house should be first of all a home, and only secondarily a work of art, for the more nearly it fulfills the first function the greater chance it has to fulfill the second.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS
By H. IRVING KING

LUCKY AND UNLUCKY DAYS

No superstition is more widespread than the belief in lucky and unlucky days. It dates back to the Romans, and while the empire of the Caesars has vanished the superstition survives. Most men, perhaps, have what they consider their lucky and unlucky days—days on which they would hesitate to embark on a new enterprise or days which they would choose for so doing. This arises from the fact that man is essentially egocentric, and in his experiences thinks he notices that certain day seems propitious to his affairs, while a certain other day is unpropitious. "What's your lucky day?" is not unusual as a casual inquiry among Wall street men.

The almost universal idea that Friday is an unlucky day undoubtedly originated in the fact the Crucifixion took place on that day. This superstition regarding Friday was formerly very strong among sailors; and is today among those manning sailing vessels or rattle-trap tramp steamers who have to wrestle with the great forces of nature for their lives. Masters of such vessels would not willingly choose Friday as a sailing day; or if they did, might have trouble with their crews. But it has been observed that sailors on the great ocean liners, whose vast powers seem superior to winds and waves, show little or no disinclination to sail on a Friday.

Home Life of the Arrawak Indian

As told by Rev. H. E. Haas, pastor of the Hilltop Lutheran church, former missionary in British Guiana.

The home life of the Arrawak Indians of South America in their native state is one of the most beautiful that one can conceive. This home, especially among the Indians where the United Lutheran church in America has work, is the one that the writer will try to describe. This tribe is life most feared by all the other Indian tribes in South America for they were supposed to be the possessors of a secret poison that they used quite freely on their enemies. The poison was either used on arrows or by secretly placing it in food stuffs. Today this seems to be a forgotten art if we may call it an art.

The Arrawak tribe of Indians of the South American continent is said to be the largest. They reach from the southern border of Brazil up and thru Central America and some few groups of them are found in several of the West Indies. They are Indians small in stature when compared to the North American Indian. Their complexion is olive and they have bright black eyes and shiny black straight hair. Their smallness of physique is caused by living in the tropics. There is a tendency of all races to be stunted in growth thru constant living in the tropics. This is the reason for the great exodus of children of the foreigners to get them out of the tropics when they reach the age of twelve.

The common dress of the Indian today is that of the men in khaki trousers with a belt of red cloth tied around his waist, and that of the women, a white or printed dress, both bare-footed and usually without a hat. Some hats are worn but mostly by the men. Among the Indians far in the interior the art of using feathers for personal adornment is still practiced. They are very fond of making feather head dresses and feather capes. The feathered head dress is very unique and beautiful in color scheme. A scull cap is first made of palm fibre with large mesh, the mesh being from an eighth to a quarter of an inch. Then feathers of bright color are tied by their quills with palm fibre in each of the cross mesh found in the cap Feathers of bright colors are used and permitted to retain their natural color as taken from the bird.

ARE MARRIED YOUNG

As we find it in most tropical countries as we find it among the Indians of South America, they marry quite young, the girl about thirteen to sixteen and the boy eighteen or a little over. Before we see them in their married life, let us first see them in courtship. The courtship for the most part takes place along the water. The Indian always lives along a river or stream and these are their means of travel. They never seem to cut trails thru the forests. On a beautiful tropical moonlight night, when all nature seems filled with the lovemoon, birds chirping softly to their mates, insects crooning their love songs, and wild animal life bursts forth in their loud frightening howls in love calls to their mates, the Indian young man is also heard expressing his love in song to his sweetheart.

From the distance comes the soft indistinct voice singing to the accompaniment of his rassshjung, drifting over the water. His rassshjung was made with his own hands and is very similar to a ukelele. With care he has gone into the bush and selected his piece of brown silverbalii. Carefully he has placed it away in his lunab to season. When it has thoroughly seasoned, with the aid of his cutlass he begins his task of making his instrument. Day in and day out, week in and week out slowly and carefully, he whittles away until he has his instrument all shaped and finished ready for the keys, bridge and strings. He selects a piece of womarra (South American ebony) from which he whittles his keys and bridge. Then carefully placing his sounding post into place he is ready to go and sing to his hopes for mate. Slowly he glides along in his corrial thrumming away softly his lovesong.

As he nears the water-side, he finds her there waiting for him. Softly he talks to her and she replies in what seems an embarrassed smile. Softly they chat for quite a time then slowly he backs away to drift down the river to his home going as he came rassshjung in hand and voice softly crooning his plaintive lovesong. He will come many times until they decide they care enough for each other to build their lunab. When this point is reached and the day set for them to become man and wife she tells her mother what she hopes to do and the time set for the event. The mother in turn informs the father from whom the young man must ask consent.

MUST ASK FATHER

The day arrives when the young man comes to the girl's home to speak with the father and ask consent to take his daughter for his wife. He comes in his newly finished corral with his canister. The father is waiting for him for he has been expecting him. He talks with him for a time and if the father consents he immediately brings his canister to the lunab there to remain until he and his bride have cleared their ground and constructed their own lunab.

He may had on asking the father for the hand of his daughter that he is not the only suitor. If this is the case he must be willing to compete with the other suitor or suitors in two contests as to which is the best suited for the hand of the daughter. The day is set when the young men must in contest. The first contest is that of which young man can stare into space the longest without winking his eyes, wins. The second is which can stand the most punishment while running the gauntlet, being all the time beaten with many cat-o'-nine-tails. The young man that wins these contests wins the girl for his bride.

NO WEDDING CEREMONY

We now see the young couple living in the home of her father getting ready to make a home of their own. They have had no wedding ceremony or wedding feast. As far as the writer has been able to discover there is no ceremony other than the asking of the young lady's father for her hand. Also the writer has never been able to hear of a couple thus joined that have not remained true to each other until death.

Everything is now in readiness for them to locate their home and begin the construction of their house or lunab. A suitable place is located along the river bank that appeals to the couple and they busy themselves with clearing it.

He must have first his posts, for his uprights then his sills, plates and rafters. All these other than the rafters he gets either from the green heart tree or the coccorulli. With his broad axe he skillfully cuts down his materials in the dark of the moon, because his grandfather has instructed him that if he wants his materials to last he must cut them when the sap has gone down into the root of the tree to sleep for the night. In the bright of the moon the sap is too busy going thru the trunk and branches to sleep. The logs he squares with the use only of his broad axe. When he has them in readiness for use for his house one would think that the sharpest of planes had been used to finish them, for the surfaces are so smooth; but the broad axe is all that has touched them. He carries them out of the bush to his location and plants the post-uprights in their proper places for his house. With great skill and precision he digs his mortises in the uprights for the tenons of his sills and plates. With all fitting properly he pins them together with wooden pins, thus binding them very firmly in their proper places, with no nails being used.

City Revenue High

Wearing Green?

Sunday will be an especially good rish holiday in celebration of the memory of St. Patrick. In addition to the expected green of spring, a flashy array of the color will be in style if worn in neckties, shirts, socks, handkerchiefs, hat bands and hair ribbons if there happen to be any yet in style.

More Linguistic Lines Submitted

Several more linguistic lines were submitted this week and the interest is growing. They are easily written and much entertainment and if they have prize winning qualities they are profitable. One dollar is awarded for the best one submitted each week.

Here is a suggestion. When your friends call in the evening or if you are having a party make linguistic lines add to their entertainment by having a contest. Let each person write a line according to the rules on page 4 and then mail or bring them to the Record office addressed to the Contest Editor.

Someone at your party may be lucky in winning. Be sure the full name and address is on each paper.

West High Motto From W. H. S.

W. H. S., Wisdom, Honesty, Sincerity.

This motto originated in 1908 when the old West High was new.

There was hung above the stage of the new auditorium a beautiful shield painted in brown and gold, with those three words inscribed, Wisdom, Honesty and Sincerity.

At the last assembly Mr. Mugly called the students' attention to the shield above the stage. He explained the words, saying that if each pupil lived up to the meaning of these words success would be assured. Many wondered why West High school was not inscribed above the stage but when he further stated that the first letter in each word formed W. H. S. and meant also West High school there was a burst of applause from the students showing their approval of the shield and its sentiment.

As the new West was being completed and the workers were wondering what kind of decoration to put above the stage Mr. Mugly suggested that they use the three words. This met with their immediate approval. So now again the unique initials of West High school in those three words, Wisdom, Honesty and Sincerity are inscribed above the stage.

NEED OF CLASSIFIED CARRIER STATION ON HILLTOP POINTED TO BY MERCHANTS

Proof that the business men of the Hilltop are interested in having a classified carrier station established in this section is shown in the following interviews at random among the merchants and professional men. They give their statements concerning the post-office as follows:

"We are due to some consideration on the Hilltop because we are four miles away from the main postoffice and certainly an office is the first and last word in a community the size of this," said H. D. Culp of the Hilltop Building and Loan.

"The North End doesn't have the population that the Hilltop does and they have an office. The 30,000 people on the Hilltop should have a branch office to serve them," said Fred L. Sulsberger, jeweler.

D. O. Sites, of the Sites Electric Co., said the population alone was enough to warrant an office.

"Much of my merchandise is received by mail," states Homer Shank, of Shank's Men's Wear Shop, "and often they make mistakes in delivery. This delay of time would be eliminated if the office was handy here. I have also found that the present sub-station does not carry money to cash money orders and often do not have adequate supplies of stamps or envelopes on hand."

"Economy to the government and convenience to the Hilltop people make an office necessary," said H. G. Butler of Butler Builders.

H. G. Deems of the West Side Lumber Co., pointed out the saving of time to the carriers in eliminating the long street car rides and that the service would be better than the present substation service.

"There is no argument against it," states C. J. Kohn of the Kohn Funeral Home.

"There is enough business to justify it," says R. D. Hastings, manager of the Hilltop Record.

"The intersection of the car lines at Hague and Broad present adequate facilities for the carriers in reaching the more distant points from the station," said Paul Roush of the E.-H. Hardware Co.

That it would better the community was pointed out by W. H. Suter, dry cleaner.

Fred Raether of the Economy Variety store pointed to the rapid growth of the Hilltop as the main reason for an office.

The western growth and the great amount of territory that will soon be taken in by the Hilltop is reason enough for the office, is the opinion of W. L. Millikin, of Millikin Hardware Co., and former city councilman.

"In the seven years that I have been here I have noticed the growth of the Hilltop and also that the postal facilities haven't been keeping up with the growth," said G. T. Cooper of the Cooper Music Co.

"Sullivant avenue needs better mail service and I am for the office because I believe it will help our situation," said G. M. Painter, grocer.

Rex Benefield and DeWitt Hicks of the Hilltop Furniture Co. stated that it will offer later collection service and give the Hilltop people a chance to have their mail sooner. They pointed out that if any section in the city deserved a post office it was the Hilltop, because of the nature of the community in being a small town in itself.

"We are no longer rural," says Frank Morgan, barber.

"We are entitled to better mail service and better facilities for mailing packages in the rush season," said R. O. Harrison, manager of the Hilltop Bank.

The above is but a small representation of the merchants of the community.

Spring Fever Due to Arrive Today

And it came to pass that the 21st day of March arrived with all the glory of Spring.

But there were some in the multitudes who were doubters and had more faith in the south sayer's "Beware the Ides of March." And these persons were termed pessimists because they would not venture forth into the fresh air scantily attired and they went about wearing remnants of their winter raiment for fear of catching flu and doctor bills.

But it so happened that those who were of light heart and light clothes merrily skipped along in the breezes with little thoughts of Ides of March or south sayers or red flannels and gave vent to their feelings, which had hitherto been in hibernation, by pomeling gaily upon ice cream sodas, picking pussy willows and tilling the soil in hopes of a heavy lettuce crop.

"South sayers begone," sayeth the optimists. "Remember that ye are living in the age of the automobile and not in Caesar's chariot time. Therefore remember ye also that whereas the chariot has given place to the four wheeled buggy even so the pessimist must give way to the optomist and go forth into the warm air and enjoy it."

And on the appointed day, which corresponds with this, the wives of the households were busily engaged in the business of shaking their dust mops out back windows, hanging the winter bedding in the sun for its annual airing, and transferring a collection of tin cans from their accustomed places to a spot of comfort in the alley.

The men of course went about their duties and gave comment on their plans for planting, new scores of the baseball world and possibilities for a hole in one.

And the effect was such that young and old heartily agreed that regardless of how a young man's fancy turned it was better to love and lose than never to love at all.

Such were the happenings of the day for it is written that the 21st day of March shall mark the passing of the winter and the beginning of spring fever.

A SWIMMING POOL FOR THE HILLTOP

The fact that winter is so near gone and summer so close calls the needs of summer to our attention and we are reminded at once that nothing could be needed more by the Hilltop than a swimming pool.

Nearly every city of the country of any size has a swimming pool of some kind. Even communites of the larger cities are building them in order to offer their residents the advantages of such healthful and wholesome recreation as swimming in the summer months. We site as an example the pool of Grandview.

The closest pool is that of the Central Y. M. C. A., which is far from adequate during the summer months and serves but a very small portion of the people. In addition it is an inside pool.

Residents of the Hilltop, especially young boys and girls, who are interested in swimming, must travel more than nine miles to a pool by going to Olentangy Park. Some will risk their lives by swimming in the nearby contaminated streams or the water holes of the stone quarries.

During the past summers hundreds of smaller children have flocked the streets to have their only outdoor splash party following a heavy rain.

That there is need for a pool is evident. Many reasons can be given. That there is a desire for one is assured. Ask your friends. That it is possible to have one on the Hilltop is a fact. The conclusion remains as a challenge and we could say it should be properly directed to the Hilltop Business Men's Assocation.

Further ideas, estimates and plans will be given here from week to week.

Whereas some editors advise their readers to tour their home town when contemplating a trip, we feel that the Hilltop will learn more by the ideas our "touring residents" get in other sections and cities. A little period away from home makes it more appreciated when one returns.

One can't always tell what the other fellow is thinking of and for that reason it is sometimes best to refrain from speaking outright.

One of the men to be admired is the one who comes back with interest in his work after he has been peeved by an associate but the one to be most admired is the one who never gets peeved.

The Spectator

"Colleg[e] grades are no measures of ability."

Grades As Estimates

"The best way to have that satisfied feeling," said Jack Wordley, college student of the Club, when he was talking with Sir Little one day this week, "is to get your thoughts off your chest."

This led to inquiry on the part of Sir Little and Jack continued by telling of his experiences at school recently.

"There is no use for the outsider to point to a fellow's college grades and judge his ability thereby. Grades in college are no longer measures of anything."

Says Jack, "I just finished a writing course at the university and my lowest grade was in it. In truth I spent more time on the subject than any other. This however had no influence on the grade. I have found that to get the high mark from the professor in mind it is necessary to first determine his politics, his likes and dislikes, this to be followed by much attention. Furthermore one doesn't dare drop a word in opposition."

College Democracy?

"In college we are preached to by those who are supposed to know, relative to the freedom of speech that should be observed in outside life. The truth is that the college is the poorest example of freedom of thought. Broad mindedness is lacking there more than elsewhere.

"Those who are aiming high by deriving high grades must put the soft pedal on the comment or criticism of the professor or his course. He generally has his way of doing a thing and ideas of undergraduates are not welcome." So is the college professor summarized by Jack Wordley.

The Professor Speaks

What dissatisfies one usually makes a good argument for two if the proper parties can be involved. In the particular case another member of the Club, Professor Tittle, was willing to give his views.

Says he, "Jack is truthful in his statements. Grades don't mean that one student has received more from his courses than another. The one who devotes all time to studies and little to experience has wasted time in the four or more years in college. Generally he must devote an equal number of years or possibly more when he is graduated, to the work of gaining necessary experience with his associates.

"The best students of college may be the targets of grafters when they get out because they haven't learned how to deal with their fellows. On the other hand it is entirely possible for one to get both grades and necessary experience," he continued.

Grading Papers

One of the peculiar features pointed out by Professor Tittle was that many instructors and professors never grade their examination papers and base their grades largely on a students appearance.

"That it has been whispered that needs get their grades through their favorable impressions on the professors rings us to realize that it is done by some professors. I have had many students visit my office before finals or luring the quarter and try their tactics on me. However I feel that I am a good judge of character and don't allow their flattering speeches to influence the grade they are to receive," he says.

On the Approach of Spring

"It's in the air," was the greeting I received from Red Pullin early this morning when we met in front of the hardware store from which I had come with a sack of grass seed and a hoe.

"And all through our systems," I added, knowing well that the sight of my hoe and grass seed had brought up the subject of the spring weather.

No one is complaining," he continued. "but then we can expect that a little later when the air is somewhat warmer and summer storms cause some to blow away to dark basements."

Adventurous Allen attempted necromantics, accumulated autographs, amused Americans, administered antitoxin, amputated nobbling nuns, attained attractive attire, annoyed august attorneys, audaciously auctioneered antiques, admired accomplished actors and ambitious actresses, artfully annexed antling as an asset, and, after again and again avoiding angry animals, actually ate arsenic sconns, appeasing an abnormal appetite, and awoke almost an angel uttering anthems.

The second prize goes to "Ruth." Ruth did not say where she lives, but she reads the Record, so is eligible to try again. Ruth writes:

Seven slim soldiers stand stalwartly, steadily suspending seven shining steel swords, slanting slightly southward; sadly singing seven sweet songs since such songs sound sweeter sung sadly; suddenly said seven slim soldiers swiftly swinging seven said shining swords startled seven sweet sisters.

Honorable mention goes to Eugene, and we want to hear from her again. Eugene says: When Willie willfully writes William's will, who will willfully write Walter's will which William wants written with Wilies's will.

We ask the winning contestants to call at the Record office for their awards. Linguistic Lines contest is open to any reader of the Hilltop Record without restrictions, so we are expecting an increasing number of lines next week. All lines should be accompanied by the correct name and address of the contestant.

The rules of the contest remain the same—Write a single, complex or compound sentence, each word of which begins with the same letter. You may choose any letter you please.

Home Life of the Arrawak Indian

As told by Rev. H. E. Haas, pastor of the Hilltop Lutheran church, former missionary in British Guiana.

If he wants furnishings for his home he must again turn to the jungle for these.

The first thing he needs is his bed. Nature has given him that from which he is able to construct a very comfortable bed and really too comfortable for in it he spends too much of his time. He searches for an ita palm tree with long stemmed leaves. These he must find along the river bank for they grow in a very wet place. He cuts the longest of these stems and puts them in the sun to dry for a few days. When they have thoroughly dried he beats them out until the long fibre is seen. These long threads of fibre are thruout the pith. It is about the caliber of No. 12 thread. These threads of fibres are twisted together until they are the thickness of light twine. This twine is wound in a ball ready for him when he wishes to begin his bed, which is a hammock.

A SHACK FOR SLEEP

In the upper part of his home underneath the leaf roof he stretches his hammock across from rafter to rafter. In this he and his wife comfortably sleep but not in a hammock as we would, he sleeps cross ways. When the little strangers arrive in the home they also sleep comfortably in their father's and mother's hammock until they are large enough for a hammock of their own.

This is not all the furniture we find in the home. We find one or two pieces more. Of course the next thing he would want is something to sit on and nature here again has given him the knowledge of constructing for himself a very odd, yet ornamental and comfortable stool. These he carves out of a solid block of wood. He constructs the seat about six inches wide and in the shape of a crescent. The ends of the crescent making the side of his seat. The stool usually rests on a base that is carved like some kind of an animal or turtle. One of the most common types of bases is that in the likeness of the armadilla and the turtle. Oft times he uses the juice of different kinds of fruits or berries to color this stool. The writer might state here that these stools are very few and rarely seen among the Indians today and the making of them seems to be a forgotten art. They bring a very good price at curio shops today.

The last of the essential things needed for the home is the eating and cooking utensils, altho in the native state the Indian eats nothing that is cooked in a pot. All his cooked foods were cooked on the split iron heated stones.

THE USE OF THE GOURD

Again we must turn to nature, too, for our Indian utensils. He finds these growing on a large, heavy-limbed bush known as the calabash tree. On this tree grows a gourd-like fruit, of all sizes from a diameter of four inches to that of three and twelve inches. When ripe and ready to pick for use, it is of green color. The Indian takes it and cuts it in half then cleans it out of its seeds and pith. He places it in the sun to dry for a time. After it has dried it is very hard and very durable. If he wants to make a vessel for the carrying of water he cuts a small hole in the top about three or four inches in diameter and then this hole he scoops out the seeds and pith before he permits it to dry in the sun. If he should be artistically inclined he may decorate it with carvings on the outside. This he can do in such a way that it will have three shades when finished.

Franklin County Had Less Than Half Present Population Of Hilltop in 1830

A look back at what Ohio was like in 1830 is shown by a Tourists Pocket Map of the state almost 100 years old published by S. Augustus Mitchell at Philadelphia. The map is the property of H. O. Elder, 206 S. Burgess Ave.

A census of the state in 1830 is posted in the front of the heavy cover that the map folds up in.

That the map is called a tourists map is one of the things of interest, showing that the great band of autoists of today who cover several hundred miles per day have evidently been derived from the one time tourist.

Columbus was at that time one of the few cities that had such a famous road as the National Road going through it. It corresponded to the present national highway. Four other common and principal roads also came into Columbus according to the map and a canal came to the south end of town.

Other towns listed in Franklin County at the time were Franklin, Madison, Dublin, Norwich, Worthington, Middletown, Georgesville and Jackson.

Franklin County in 1830 had less than half the number of people that now live on the Hilltop. There were 14,741 in the county. The population of the state was 937,903.

Hamilton County lead in population with 52,817 people. Van Wert County was lowest in the list with but 49 residents.

Another feature of the map is a profile of the Ohio and Erie Canal showing the high and low spots of the state. A profile of the Miami Canal is also given.

The map was given to Elder by his grandfather.

Senior, Junior High Teachers to Direct Crowd

Dedication Services To Be Held Later in Spring With Alumni Assisting.

Open house for all residents of the Hilltop will be held Sunday afternoon, April 7, at the new West High school from 2 to 4 o'clock.

O. H. Mugly, principal of West Senior High school and H. H. Reighley, principal of West Junior High school have extended a cordial invitation to all adults to be present sometime during the afternoon.

Only a few student monitors will be present from the student body to help direct the visitors and explain the use of the new building. No other students or children will be given permission to visit the school. This is done in order to give the adults a better chance to inspect the building and because the students are acquainted with the building.

There will be no program but the teaching staff will be on hand to welcome the parents and direct them about the school.

Since the school was opened to the students at the beginning of the second semester there has been no special visiting days because several workmen have been busy inside finishing some of the rooms. Nearly all the work inside has been completed now and the outside will be cleared soon.

The dedication of the new building will take place later in the spring when the weather will permit an outside ceremony. The West High Alumni Association will take an active part in the program at that time.

Starling Wins Prize Picture

Is Awarded for Most Visitors to Columbus Gallery of Fine Arts.

Starling Junior High school is again the winner of the prize picture offered by the Columbus Gallery of Fine Arts to the school having the most visitors for the year 1928. Starling made 2463 visits to the art gallery during the year.

The prize picture is a winter scene, in which the artist, Mr. Carl Springer, of Library Court, Columbus, has caught the scintillating movement and lace-like appearance of the trees in winter, and a dark, moving stream of water.

Mr. Carl Bolander, director of the Columbus Gallery of Fine Arts presented the picture to the pupils in assembly, Friday.

He also exhibited a number of prize posters advertising the Chicago World's Fair in 1933.

A picture of the new art gallery was also shown. "When this building is finished," Mr. Bolander said, "Columbus will not have to take its hat off to any Ohio city."

The picture to be awarded next year portrays a bit of Spanish life. It is beautiful in color and is almost like a real history of Spain telling of the difficulties and the struggles of the people.

Home Life of the Arrawak Indian

As told by Rev. H. R. Haas, pastor of the Hilltop Lutheran church, former missionary in British Guiana.

The last things he has to get in readiness for his home is his kitchen. This is a very simple affair thruout. He makes a simple lean-to bamboo leafed roof structure with the weather side also covered with leaves. If he can make use of any trees for his lean-to kitchen he readily does so but if no trees are properly located he plants bamboo posts. His stove is nothing other than three or four stones with a large flat stone resting on the others. Under this flat stone he builds his fire so as to heat it and cook his food or bake his cassava bread.

To farm he must have a field. In selecting his field he pays little attention to the growth of underbrush or the large trees found on the place where he wishes his field, but he looks at the texture of the soil. When he finds the desired soil no matter how deep in the bush he begins to clear in the same fashion that he cleared for his home. When he has thoroughly burned and cleared off the debris from his field he is ready to plant.

HIS ESSENTIAL FOOD

The first thing he plants and that from which comes his essential food is cassava. Cassava is a large topped tubular root. He secures some old tops of cassava which he cuts into lengths of about a foot. He plants these sticks in the ground that he has loosened up very little. The sticks soon take root and his cassava begins to grow. After three or four months his field is ready to cut, as he says, but rather the cassava roots are ready to be dug as potatoes are dug. He digs out the entire field of the long slender roots which grow in bunches at the base of the stock. (These tubular roots have a very hard rind on them.)

He carries his cassava home and gives it to his wife to prepare for the making of cassava bread. If she would eat this root as it comes from the field it would kill her for it is deadly poison. In making her cassava bread she must first scrape the rough skin from the meat and she has left in her hand a juicy snow white meat. This meat she grates into a large hollowed out log. When she has finished grating all her cassava she must now extract the juice. This she does with a martappi, which is a long tubular woven squeezer which when pressed together becomes quite large in diameter. When in this shape she fills it with grated cassava. The open end which has a loop at one side is hung on the limb of a tree while the closed end with a loop is permitted to hang down. She places a limb of a tree thru this loop letting one end go thru the loop and the other end rest on the ground. She sits in the middle of the limb which causes the martappi to stretch out in length thus squeezing the juice out of the pulp. The juice is not permitted to waste for she saves it and uses it to season meats which she make their famous dish of pepper pot.

The squeezed out grated pulp of the cassava is then placed in a large square sieve which is also made out of palm leaves zipped in strips and woven together so that there are fine holes left to permit the fine particles of grated cassava to sift thru. This is sifted on to the hot stone stove and permitted to bake into a large cake. She adds nothing to it and as it bakes you can see it gradually cooking together until she has her large cassava cake. She turns it over very quickly and dexterously with the aid of a woven palm leaf fan. When it is thoroughly baked she places it in the sun to dry. When thoroughly dry she stacks them away in her house to remain until ready for use. If she desires some for a meal she breaks off the amount needed and toasts it over a fire until it is brown and then she has it ready to eat. It is very delicious and good. This cassava bread is eaten at every meal altho the meals are not at set intervals but whenever the family feels so disposed.

THE BANANA FIELD

The next field to prepare is the banana field. The same method is used in preparing it. Good banana suckers are selected, which are nothing other than root shoots from an old banana tree. These are planted at proper intervals in slightly loosened ground and left to nature to grow without the least cultivation. In nine months time the bananas are ready to pick. They are picked green and soaked in water for a day then hung in the house to ripen. If they are permitted to ripen on the tree the peeling when one tries to remove it will cling to the fruit and the center will be hard. The banana tree bears only one bunch of bananas. When this bunch is picked the tree is cut down and new suckers sprout forth from the old stump and his next trees are on their way. He usually plants the lady finger or the spice bananas which are small with a thin skin and very delicate flavor and texture.

This is about the extent of his farming with the exception of the planting of a few watermelon vines. The primitive Indian did not have his rice fields. He has only known rice since he has come in contact with civilization.

The hunting divides itself into two phases, that is fishing and hunting birds and beasts.

When we see him going fishing we see him leaving in his corrial and with him is his bow and arrows. His bow is about four feet long and made of what is known as bow wood. The arrows are different in heads for the different types of fish. He makes them out of wild cane and barbs them.

Slowly he glides along the banks of the river ever looking under trees that hang over the waters edge for fish. Sometimes he goes to the mucka-mucka bushes and picks their seeds which look like hedge apples and tears them open and throws them into the water to float about. The fish are very fond of this. When he sights a fish he rises slowly in his boat to a standing posture and pulls his bow and lets the arrow fly. In a very few seconds the arrow is seen bobbing about and then remaining still. He paddles to his arrow and lifts it with the fish firmly held. So continues this until he has his supply of fish. If fishing is particularly good he may shoot an extra amount. The fish are carried home and placed inside of his kitchen roof above his fire to smoke and cure for a time when fish are scarce.

He may also build a fish pen in which to trap fish. The gate is a drop gate. When the tide is coming in he raises the gate to let the fish come in and eat of the bait placed in the pen. When the tide recedes he drops the gate. As the tide reaches its lowest he goes into the pen and with his hands catches the fish in the shallow muddy pools.

The third way that he may get his supply of fish is by poisoning a stream. Where the stream flows into the river he builds a fence of palm lath closing the mouth of the stream. He goes up stream a great distance with some cuttings from a vine that he has discovered which will poison the fish. When he reaches the place where he wants to begin his work with a heavy stick he beats the vine into shreds and washes it in the stream. As he nears the fence he sees the result of his work. The fish have all gone down stream as far as they can and the poison begins to take effect. He does not have to reach in the water for his catch but the fish seem to all jump out on the banks and all he must do is pick them up and put them in his basket and carry them home. This poison seems only to intoxicate the fish not harming them in any other way and not effecting the value of the flesh.

HE GOES HUNTING

Let us see him as he goes hunting. His weapons are the bow and arrows specially for hunting large game and also he has with him a blow pipe. The blow pipes are long tubes of a certain type of reed and about eight to ten feet long. In this tube he places an arrow. Holding it in position he places one end of the tube in his mouth and the other towards the object he wishes to shoot and blows. He blows this arrow out of the pipe with great force and accuracy, also a further distance than one can realize. He uses this blow pipe mostly for killing birds and the smaller animals, such as the accurri, which is a large size guinea pig, somewhat larger than the cotton tail. With the bow and arrows he kills the bush hog, or peccary; the labba, a large water rodent; the mipourri, or the tapir and the water hass. He carries his game home and eats as much roasted flesh as he can and the balance he smokes to preserve it for future use.

It is with great delight that he carries home his supply of food to his family. His children are the center of his whole life. His thought seems ever to be on them and their welfare. With great care he whittles them small paddles and corrials to play with. When they are large enough to sit in a corrial and reach over the side and paddle he makes them a child's paddle. It is a beautiful sight to see the Indian family gently yet swiftly gliding over the water's surface. The mother in the bow of the boat maybe with a small baby lying across her lap as she paddles, in back of her two, three or more boys and girls, then the father in the stern, all paddling in unison, the father also steering the corrial. We hear the mother and the girls striking the side of the corrial and making a clicking noise with their paddles but we notice the father and the boys making no other sound with their paddles than the swish thru the water, for if he would click his paddle he would be greatly embarrassed for women and girls are the only ones that do this.

THE SHADOW OF DEATH

Happy is the Indian family as we see them in their natural state. But in all Indian families there comes sooner or later the great shadow of death, that he cannot understand. The death may have followed a long illness. During this illness roots and herbs are sought from which medicine is made in effort to cure. The Indian seems to know what each root and herb is good for in a medicinal way. Not only does he collect these but he has a knowledge of other things as cures, handed him by his forefathers. He takes the flesh of the houtzin and cuts it in strips and places it in the sun to dry. This dried flesh is eaten by the patient who is suffering from a chest cold. He also goes to the savannah and shoots a deer, the horns of which he carries home and gives to one afflicted with tuberculosis. The horn is scraped and the scrapings eaten by the sick as a cure. He takes the tail of a freshly killed scorpion and with the stinger scratches his forearm to immune him from the sting of a live one. Many are the things that he uses to bring back health and strength but if death comes great is the sorrow and mourning. With care the body of the deceased is washed and the water saved. Perfect shaped the grave is dug in the sand on the bank of the stream or river near his home to receive the body. When all is in readiness the body is carried lovingly to the grave and placed in it. All the clothing and personal effects of the deceased are buried with him. The grave is filled and the earth mounded up. The last rite that is performed at the grave before leaving it forever, for superstitious reasons, is the pouring of the water that was used in the washing of the body, over the mound, then all is done that can be done in their estimation. The house where the deceased died is deserted in fear that death might return and claim another. The family must immediately go and stay with another family until they have gone thru the experience of home making again as has been described.

In this sadness there seems to come before this Indian something that he cannot explain. What is it all about? Why should such a thing enter his home and cause life? What has become of the deceased? There is something lacking in his knowledge of life. There is a great void. Here is where we find his great need of civilization and that is Christianity. Take this Indian family in its home and life as described and add Christianity, full faith in Jesus Christ and the Indian home life true to its standards plus the standards laid down by Jesus and it would be a Utopia.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

SCARING SCREECH-OWLS

Everybody knows of course, that to hear a screech-owl sounding his melancholy note in the darkness of the night is a bad omen. It fortells misfortune at least—some people say death in the family. It is an idea of primitive man, exists today among all savage peoples who know the owl or its congeners and lingers in the superstitions of civilized races. But as every bane is said to have its antidote the evil effects of the owl's hooting may be warded off if you only us the right magic.

The directions for counteracting the evil omen of the hooting owl differ in different parts of the country; but they all appear to have as a basis the idea of reversal which the ancients freely incorporated in their magic formulas. One way is to take off your shoe and turn it upside down. Then the owl will flee away and no harm will ensue. In one section they say that taking off some article of clothing, like your coat, for instance, and putting it on again "wrong side out," will have the same effect. And in another you are advised to turn your pockets "wrong side out."

The idea in this: The hooting of the owl would, in the natural course of things, produce misfortune. It is natural to wear your coat "right side out," and your shoe, of course, must be worn with the sole down. Now, reverse this natural order. Turn the shoe sole up, the coat wrong side out, and arrange the pockets in the reverse position from the natural one. This sets up a counter current as it were—the natural course of things is reversed and, by sympathy, there is reversed, also, the ordinary effects of the owl's hooting.

This idea of reversals in primitive magic is manifested in various superstitions of long descent. It was this idea which caused witches to work baleful spells by repeating the Lord's Prayer backwards.

Freemasonry

The term "Freemason" grew out of the fact that only craftsmen not under control of the guilds were eligible. As the election was required to be unanimous, the members denoted themselves Free and Accepted Masons.

SELECT STUDENT IN SPEECH MEET AT W. HI SCHOOL

Ernest Skaates to Represent School in City Contest at North on April 19.

Ernest Skaates won out in the preliminaries of the oratorical contest at West High school Tuesday in assembly. He will represent the school in the all-city contest at North High, April 19.

Classes in costume designing were organized at West High under the direction of Miss Helen Skeele this week. They meet on Wednesday and Friday at the eighth period to make the costumes for the coming class play, "Road to Yesterday," to be presented on April 25 and 26 in the school auditorium.

All pupils having a part in the chorus of the senior play are to make their own costumes. These classes are to help the girls decide on the proper colors to use. They will also make the boys' costumes as well as their own. As the play has a medieval setting the designs require study and skill.

The boys are to have "Robin Hood" suits of green and white, while the girls will have gypsy dresses in all the bright colors.

Jessie Pinshenschaum was elected president of the Library Councilors of West High at a called business meeting recently. The other officers, chosen at the same time was Pearl Andrews, secretary.

GROWTH CAUSES NEED OF SCHOOL

Westgate and Broadview Residents Petition School Board for New Building.

When the School Board meets Monday afternoon it will receive a petition signed by 280 residents of Westgate and Broadview additions asking that an elementary school be built in their community in the near future.

The 10-acre site now owned by the board in Westgate is the land upon which they want the building erected. Their request has been submitted to George E. Roudebush, assistant superintendant.

W. V. Drake, clerk, points out that there is $82,500 available in September in bonds issuable without popular vote but a great part of this money is needed for repairs of other schools he says.

If the money from the bonds is used for repairs in other buildings it would be possible to have a bond issue in the fall election to raise the money needed for the proposed building. It is also possible that portables might be used to start with.

The growing need of the Elementary school is seen with the growth of the section west and south of Sullivant avenue. The 10-acre site now owned by the board would be ideally situated for the building and would care for the future growth of that section out to Duerr Road. West Broad street and John Burroughs elementary schools are many blocks away from that section that is now being occupied.

Church Cornerstone Is Placed Sunday

Cornerstone for the new Westgate Evangelical church was laid Sunday afternoon with special services presided over by Rev. C. D. Osborne, pastor. Rev. R. A. Sain, presiding elder, preached the service.

Rev. H. C. Hutchison, president of the Hilltop Ministerial Association represented the Hilltop churches. Music was furnished by two quartets.

Several church documents and a copy of the Hilltop Record were placed in the corner stone.

The building will probably be completed by September 1.

P. O. Receipts Slump

Receipts of the post office during March took a drop according to figures issued last week. The decreased postal rate is responsible for the five per cent decrease in receipts says Postmaster Gerrer.

Objection Raised to Ball Playing on W. Broad School Lawn

Objection to the playing on the lawn of West Broad Street school was cited early this week. It is claimed that boys of high school age and older have been using the lawn for baseball practice and play instead of the two-acre plot in rear of the school.

School authorities strenously object to such on the grounds that there is ample space in the rear of the building on which to play. Boys are welcomed to play on the rear lot.

Much damage has been done to the grass and shrubbery on the front and side lawns. The same trouble has been found at other schools at various times.

DR. G. F. BARBER ENDS 25th YEAR

Pastor of Glenwood Church Celebrates Silver Anniversary in Ministry.

"Reminiscences of a Preacher," was the topic of Dr. George F. Barber, pastor of Glenwood Methodist church Sunday morning in keeping with his twenty-fifth anniversary in the ministry. Twenty-five carnations decorated the pulpit and following his sermon he was presented with 25 roses from the church.

In answer to his own questions as to why he became a minister he said, "When I finished college I had two things in mind—law and theology. I chose theology because I thought there my life could be best served. One should choose the calling where talents are best suited and where the best service can be rendered."

His first charge was in southern Ohio in the Mill Creek Valley at Reading, where there had not been an English speaking service for 35 years.

During the 25 years in the ministry Dr. Barber has solemnized 462 weddings, held services at 452 funerals, baptized 800 and received 1849 into church membership.

This is his fifth year at Glenwood, during which time he has had 144 weddings, 108 funerals, baptized 437 and received 833 into church membership, thus bringing Glenwood church up to first place in the city with a total membership of 1800.

B. M. APPROVE PROPOSED ROAD

Would Eliminate Sharp Curve in Norwich Township Road.

The Hilltop Business Men's Association through the president, Ray C. Haunts, Tuesday, endorsed the proposed road beyond the Marble Cliffs on the west side of the river road in Norwich Township, petitioned for by Walter Seers and others.

A letter was written to the Board of Commissioners of Franklin county asking that the road be built to comply with the request.

It was pointed out that the present road is a danger spot because of the sharp curve. The school board has approved of the proposed road because of this same fact. One continuous road would eliminate a very dangerous curve.

It is further thought that the road would be a saving to the motorists who would use it and would be of especial help to residents of the western section of the city who desire such an outlet to that part of the country.

The request of the association was presented to the commissioners Wednesday morning by W. H. Orebaugh.

A Correction

Two weeks ago the Record carried a story saying the Hilltop Six girls' basket-ball team had won the city championship. This should have been that they won the Glenwood championship for the fourth consecutive time.

Last week a story was carried stating that the girls had lost to the Cubs and had thus lost the city championship. That game however was but an exhibition game and did not count toward a championship as there are to be no girls' city finals this year. We are glad to make these corrections at this time.

By Readers of the Hilltop Record

Baked Ham

Take a slice of ham about an inch in thickness; after wiping with a damp cloth, cover top and bottom with dry mustard, as much as you can rub on. Then with as much brown sugar as will stick on. Place in an iron skillet or casserole, cover with sweet milk, and bake (with cover on) in a moderate oven, an hour and a half.

Royal Fruit Salad
(To serve eight)
1 pint pineapple tidbits,
1 pint white cherries,
½ pound almonds, blanched and quartered,
½ pound marshmallows (cut),
2 egg yolks,
½ lemon,
½ cup milk,
½ cup whipping cream.

Cook egg yolks, milk, lemon and salt together as for a soft custard, cool, add whipping cream beaten stiff and mix with fruits and nuts. Let it stand in ice box 12 to 24 hours.

Change Alphabet

One of the main changes brought to Turkey by the new regime is the substitution of the Latin alphabet for the Arabic script. The Latin alphabet is taught now everywhere, including the offices of government officials and clerks, schools, homes, and pleasure resorts. The minister of education has placed blackboards and chalk in public places, with a staff of twelve thousand teachers to speed up the learning process. Beginning December 1, all newspapers abandoned the difficult Arabic for the Latin script. The new letters are admirably adapted to the Arabic language, which, like English, has a large number of consonants and a limited number of vowel sounds.

America Inhabited 20,000 Years Ago?

The American Museum of Natural History has come to the startling conclusion that sometime between 5,000 and 20,000 years ago America was inhabited by human beings who had attained a degree of culture comparable to that of the prehistoric Egyptians. The evidence has been pronounced by leading scientists in this country and abroad as "the best proof ever offered to date of the antiquity of man in America." Quarrying at Folsum, New Mexico, workmen uncovered a sediment nine feet deep in some places, consisting mostly of wind-blown materials. Investigation showed that it bore the earmarks of rainfall conditions which have been associated with the retreat of glaciers in the Pleistocene Age. The sediment was slowly removed, and there were disclosed the bones of a herd of thirty bisons of a species long extinct. Next the archaeologists came upon sixteen arrowheads of chalcedony and jasper, fluted and shaped like razor blades. All but one were broken, but what remained showed a workmanship that equals if not surpasses anything ever found in America. A technique resembling that of the early Egyptians was revealed by the fragments.

THE NEED OF ANOTHER TRAFFIC LIGHT

The need of another traffic light in West Broad street in the vicinty of Park or Eureka avenue is seen with the proposed action of the Hilltop Business Men's Association to have the light at Oakley changed to Highland avenue if necessary.

That a light at Highland would better serve the school children at Highland Avenue school is assured with the co-operation of the school officials in having the janitors or school patrols aid the small children in getting across the street providing the light is closer to the school.

This would leave the business section in the three blocks west in a condition that is near to solid congestion or a solid line of traffic in the rush hour of the afternoon.

City officials claim that there are five lights available at present and nearly eighty requests for them. This makes the situation on the Hilltop appear somewhat dark. However it is worthy of investigation.

If the present light at Oakley is moved to Highland the next logical step is to install one at Eureka or Park avenues.

A professor in the local university states that the big trouble with business executives is that they pay too much attention to the pointing out of faults and not enough to encouraging their assistants. This is a point that might be well taken by most any of us in our dealing with others.

Now that the adults have seen the inside of the new educational machine of the Hilltop, the new West High school, there are many who are desirous of trading places with their children for a chance at the many opportunities offered.

Another feature of the West High opening was a look at the beautiful green field on which it is hoped some winning teams may be produced. We are hoping the needed solution is soon found.

"If It's Worth Building Use Good Materials"

HERE and THERE
by C. C. H.

Try anything once is the motto and slogan of the modern youth said educators in conference here last week. They seem to have taken the idea from Columbus who took a chance who still hit the mark.

* * * * *

Now that talkies have been inaugurated there is a chance for the fellow who stutters.

* * * * *

The man who tells you he has all the business he wants you begin searching for the proper word that will describe him.

* * * * *

One of life's most disappointing moments is when the ball goes off to an angle and you can't see it while looking through your favorite knot hole at the baseball park.

* * * * *

If you don't think the little things count just consider the miles of good roads that will be built from the additional cent gasoline tax. But to some who pay it the largeness of the thing will be made more noticeable from their kicks.

* * * * *

The expression from an outsider who comes to town and says he has been interested in the way in which your community sticks together and cooperates makes you further believe that there is truth in his words.

* * * * *

Thoughts of how much a swimming pool would be appreciated are in order now that the warm summer days have approached again. We join the group who say "We want a swimming pool."

* * * * *

The ordinary man's life is made interesting to everyone after he has been president once. We are anxious to learn each day where Coolidge took the dog for his morning stroll.

* * * * *

Speaking of presidents, a magazine recently printed a list of the many things received in one day by the chief executive from the common people of the country. Whereas the kings of old were showered with gold and gems the head of the modern republic is the recipient of such things as a bushel of pop corn, a baseball bat, a cake of maple sugar, a can of fish bait, woolen sleeping sox, a hay and a barrel of apples and also a pumpkin with his name on it.

* * * * *

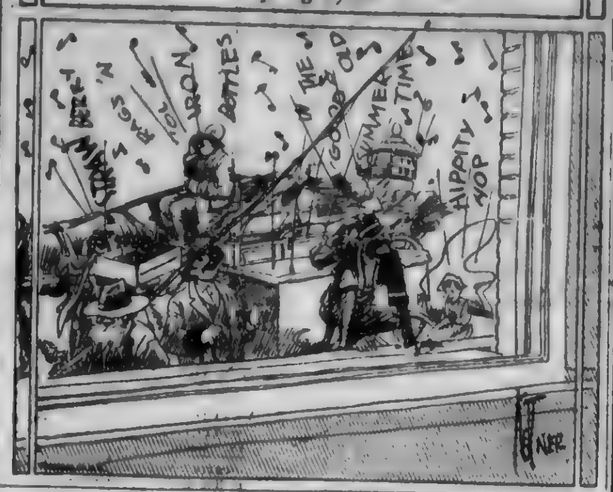
Now that the boss has bought a pair of hip boots we expect him to take a longer lunch period. Fish tales are in order also.

* * * * *

The man that moved 89 times in 20 years and yet raised a family of 14 children needs credit for the fact that none of the children were lost in the moving. And again he must have been well off because we have heard it said that every time one moves he finds something he never knew he had. We have found that this something is an unusual amount of dirt.

* * * * *

The most pleasant tinkle to the minister's ear is not those from the bells in the belfry but of the change in the collection pan.



* * * * *

The man that is unfit for his job is the dog catcher that dogs like to follow down the street and the truant officer that school children admire. They should be dog fanciers or child nurses.

Now is the time to get that new couch hammock. Complete line being shown at Hilltop Furniture Co.

You'll do better at Seiller's after all.

Linguistic Lines

We have more good linguistic lines this week than our space will permit us to print. The competition is becoming better each week which means that it is becoming increasingly difficult to pick the winners.

Miss Minnie Danford, who has one prize to her credit, comes back this prize to her credit comes back this week for another first prize with the following very cleverly constructed and balanced line. We assure the readers of Linguistic lines that this sentence is worth a second reading. Her line says:

Because brave, brawny Ben, besides biannually balancing bulky, black, badness books beneath brilliantly bright beams, built beautiful brown bungalows; Bill, believing bewitchingly bad, bulging bulletins, braggingly bribed, by bountiful boodle, Ben's big bosses beside broken, bedewed blackberry bushes, but busy, bustling, brusque Ben, being brainy, bought bleached birch boards baffling bold, burish Bill's blundering boasts.

Miss Ruth Beckwith of 176 S. Binn Blvd., wins prizes and admiration with perseverence. She wins an easy one and this week again. We know we shall have the pleasure of awarding her a first prize soon and we are willing to help with this suggestion: Don't try to get your sentences too long because they will show some weak places in judging we give grammatica strength precedence over length. This week Ruth says:

Anna, an aviation admirer, asked Alice, an aviatrix, about aviation, and Alice after answering and ascertaining Anna's aeronautical ability appointed Anna an assistant aviatrix, Anna adding airplanes appropriately acknowledged appreciation: Anna assisted Alice attempting altitudes and after audacious aeronautical acts Alice and Anna attained alarming and amazing altitudes; afterwards Alice and Anna arrived an ardent and accomplished aviatrice arranged an acrobatic aeronautical adventure acquiring an aerobone and also an award; Alice and Anna attempted aviation adventures annually and annually attained abundant acclaim and appreciation amid an applauding audience.

For honorable mention we like the following snappy line by Miss Leota Thompson of 380 Midland Ave., although we were pleased with the Peter Pan Lines by Miss Virginia Burns of 1489½ S. Ogden Ave.

Miss Thompson says quite appropriately that, Schnell's Shoe Shoppe should show some suede shoes soon.

Linguistic Lines are interesting and educational, strengthening to ones vocabulary. The Record Printing company pays one dollar for the best line and fifty cents for the second best line sent in each week. Just write a simple, complex or compound sentence each word of which begins with the same letter of the alphabet and bring or mail it to the Record by five o'clock Monday evening.

See window display of Simplex Flexies. Chas. Houx Shoe Store.

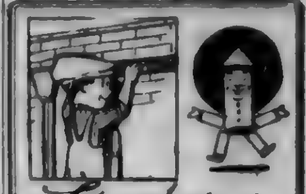
How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"HIS NIBS"

"His Nibs" is unmitigated slang for "himself"—usually in more or less sarcastic vein with the implication "the great man himself."

It is traced back to the old English word "neb" for face which came from the Anglo Saxon "nebb," originally the beak of a bird or tortoise and later extended, in a somewhat figurative sense, to signify the face or person. With the slang psychology in mind it is easily comprehendible how the contemptuous minded should have made this "His nibs!"



An early recorded use of the term, though in a gentler vein than its popular usage today, is found in the following excerpt from the old Chicago Herald:

"When the President's carriage arrives in front of the church, Albert Hawkins on the box, wearing a big bearskin cape as black as his face and driving the two big lumbering 'seat browns,' the girls gathered about the door of the sanctuary a crowd of five or three hundred awaiting the arrival of the gentleman whom Tim Campbell of New York immortalized himself by speaking of as his nibs."

New Type Buildings

Since the disastrous earthquake in Tokyo in 1923 attention has been given to finding an earthquake design of architecture. The project of an "upside-down skyscraper" has been offered to meet the situation. The design calls for a huge circular well, braced with steel framework and sunk so that the building would be 1100 feet deep. Offices would be lighted by electricity and ventilating shafts would provide the necessary fresh air. There would be the usual telephone connections and high-speed elevators.

Let us look at your leaders and gutters
We combine these three jobs in one contract and we will wager that our price will be low. At the same time we will be glad to guarantee that our results will meet with your entire approval.

The Sandman Story

by Martha Martin

ABOUT BABY HIPPO

"My darling," said Mother Hippopotamus to her baby, "no one knows how much I love you."

Mother Hippopotamus was lying in her pool, her head partly under the water, but her nostrils were above so she could breathe the air, and her mouth was above so she could speak to her baby.

The baby was a very big baby, though Mother Hippopotamus thought it was a very cunning "little dear."

"They come to the zoo," Mother Hippopotamus went on, and they think I'm big and ugly and that my skin is coarse and that I haven't any thoughts in my big head.

"I don't believe they think I feel very much. I don't believe they know what a loving, loving heart Mother Hippopotamus has.

"Oh, but they know so little! It is true I yawn right before them and show my great cavern-like mouth and jaw. But why shouldn't a yawn before them? I am not interested in them, and I do not find their society exciting. I can't talk their talk and they can't talk mine, and we don't understand each other by words or gestures.

"And Why Shouldn't We Love Our Babies?"

"Of course it may not be very polite to yawn right in some one's face. I notice that people cover up their mouths with their hands when they yawn. But if I tried to cover up my mouth I'd get all tangled up in myself, I'm sure. It would be much too much of a job.

"But oh, my darling, how a mother hippo does love her baby. There is no mother who loves her child any more, I'm sure.

"And why shouldn't we love our babies? What could be more beautiful than a hippopotamus baby? I wouldn't ask this question of a person, for the answer would not be correct according to my way of thinking.

"My answer would be:

"'There is nothing more beautiful than a hippo baby.'"

Mother Hippopotamus looked and saw that her child was just about asleep. "I will soothe him and see that he goes sound, sound asleep," she said.

So Mother Hippopotamus in her own hippopotamus fashion sang the Hippopotamus Lullaby:

Go to sleep, my dear little hippo,
Go to sleep my own little pet
And though other mothers boast of dear babies,
You're the loveliest baby of all, I bet!

"I don't suppose," Mother Hippo said to herself, "I should use slang like that before the dear—though I don't believe he heard it. But I pick up slang from humans and use it in my hippopotamus way.

"How different are the ways of humans from my ways. They do things in the daytime and seem to be rushing about them.

"But at night I become far more wide-awake and then it is I like to play and eat.

"When I lived in the African jungle I would sleep during the daytime and at night go marketing for my vegetables and such food.

"My thick skin used to be of great protection to me then as my legs are short and when I scraped my body against the ground it did not hurt because my skin was the right sort of a skin for the kind of traveling which I did.

"My skin, too, can send forth a kind of milky substance which floats about on my pool and my baby can drink of this, which a Hippo baby thinks is delicious.

"They have come and taken photographs of my baby. And I do not blame them. To me there is no more beautiful sight that a Hippo baby which I believe I have said before.

"Some one taking our picture paid of the baby!

"He has a face only a mother could love.

"And I know what he meant! He meant that only a mother could fully appreciate his great beauty and charm and loveliness.

"I understand!

"Ah, my baby is waking up now. I must whisper sweet nothings, as they say, 'in his ear.'"

Meeting of 4 o'Clock Train Past — Now Meet 9 P. M. Plane

Can you remember way back when you used to spend your evenings down at the railroad station waiting for the four o'clock train to come in? And then again you would hie away from home in order to be present when the old iron horse came puffing in at 8 p. m.

Trains are common things to most everyone and even as the horse and buggy have given way to the automobile the curiosity of the American public seems to have changed from the arrival of the evening passenger train to the arrival of the air mail.

Positive proof of the fact is shown by a visit to the Columbus Airport, Sullivant avenue, any evening after 9 o'clock. Cars from all over the city flock around the landing field in order to see the pilots of the postage routes drop and arise.

Sunday evenings are most popular. Some little anxiety is caused by the delay of a plane for those who are interested in air mail only. The presence of many of the younger generation is proof that such is a delightful way to pass the time away.

Hilltop in Council

In city council Monday night the following matters pertaining to the Hilltop were acted upon:

Passed ordinance permitting John A Bans to erect steel door areaway covering sidewalk in Columbian avenue at Sullivant avenue.

BUSINESS GOOD SAY MERCHANTS

Demand for Cash Prize Tickets Grows With Arrival of Spring Buying.

That business with the members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association is on the upward trend is shown by the number of tickets that have been given out during the past two weeks by those members who are sponsoring the cash prize contest.

Spring cleaning, planting and building have occupied the immediate attention while the clothing demand has also been stimulated through the approach of spring weather. With the passing of these rainy days of April it is thought that the Hilltop business men will experience one of the best seasons they have had in several years. Talk with the merchants indicates that they are optomistic about the next eight weeks.

As the third week of the campaign of the association was entered Monday several merchants replenished their supply of tickets for the second and third times.

They will continue to be given with each 50-cent purchase and each 50 cents received on accounts until June 1. Further details of the contest may be had by asking participating merchants.

Mayor James J. Thomas has given his hearty aid to the campaign pointing out that this is the proper time to clean up, repair and beautify. He has also accepted the honorary chairmanship of the clean-up campaign.

City departments are ready to do their part in carrying out the campaign. The refuse department will make every effort to cover the entire city within four or five weeks following the opening of the campaign. In the meantime Supt. J. L. Hoge Chefs Change Golden Turkey and Delicacies to Beef

Approximately 250 men and women who attended the "Ladies' night" at Hoge Memorial Men's Club Friday evening found that when two of the Hilltop's best chefs are in charge of the cooking, chicken gumbo, golden turkey, braised Long Island duckling or chicken en casserole Parisienne are just society names for Swiss steak, for where as the menu called for the above and many other delicacies they were served a goodly portion of beef with brown gravy and mashed potatoes with side dishes.

The chefs in name were Sam Roberts and W. K. Merriman and their assistants.

Another feature of the evening was a story telling contest in which the participants were J. A. Runyan, Joseph Hutchison, M. K. Weber, R. P. Rauch and Sam Pool. However the gold medal was awarded by Chairman George Matson to W. H. Orebaugh, although he did not take part.

A nominating committee composed of M. K. Weber, R. D. Hastings, R. P. Rauch and C. B. Sherburn was named to report candidates for election at the next meeting.

FINANCIAL P. O. STATION MAY BE LET AT HAGUE

Post Office Department Refuses Request for Classified Carrier Station Here.

With the announcement that the Post office Department would not establish a classified carrier station on the Hilltop due to the lease of a building in the bottoms for Station D, also comes word from Postmaster James R. Geren stating that the department would favorably consider the establishment of a financial station near Hague and Broad. Such a station would have all the features of a classified carrier station with the exception that no carriers would make their headquarters there.

The situation is best summed up in the letter received Saturday by C. Carlton Hartley, secretary of the Hilltop Business Men's Association, from Postmaster Geren, in which he says the following:

This office is in receipt of a communication from Hon. John H. Bartlett, First Assistant Postmaster General, Washington, D. C., under date of April 10, 1929, wherein we are informed that, after careful consideration, the department does not believe it would be justified in establishing a classified carrier station in the vicinity of Hague avenue and Broad street at this time.

Unfortunately the department has just entered into a lease for a new building for Station "D," to be located between Princeton and West Park avenues on West Broad street, said lease having been entered for a period of ten years dating from June 1, 1929. The department, therefore, feels that they would be subjected to an undue burden of expense in establishing a new carrier station at Hague and Broad, particularly by reason of the fact that most of the carriers to be assigned to the proposed Hague avenue station would of necessity have to be transferred from Station "D."

However, they have signified that they will favorably consider the establishment of a financial station at the site named, and we have, therefore, today taken the matter up with the department with a view to securing a station within the very near future. A financial station embraces all the features of a classified carrier station except that no carriers will emanate therefrom.

Assuring you of my desire to give you the best possible postal facilities, I remain,

Sincerely yours,
JAMES R. GEREN, Postmaster

Funeral services were held Friday at 8:30 at the home and at 9 at St. Aloysius church with burial in St. Joseph's cemetery.

Birthday Of John Burroughs Observed By School Namesake

This is the month when the pupils of John Burroughs school think of John Burroughs, naturalist and essayist; he was born in Roxbury, N. Y., April 3, 1837, when the wild flowers were coming out, fruit trees were in bloom, and the birds were selecting pleasant places for their summer homes.

About 1874, John Burroughs went to live on a farm where he gave his time to Literature and fruit culture.

Among his books in the libraries, the pupils, not only of the John Burroughs school, but many others, may enjoy reading "Birds and Poets," "Winter Sunshine," "Fresh Fields," "Squirrels and Other Fur Bearers," "Far and Near," "The Summit of the Years."

In an article, written many years ago for an educational paper, John Burroughs said:

I would never think of inspiring a child with an abiding love of nature by teaching him botany from a book. The child is a pet, and it is not mere mechanical knowledge of the flower that he wants, but what the flower stands for, the delight of finding it, and the many fairies with which it is associated.

"If I were a teacher, I would make excursions into the country with my children; we would ramble together under the trees, and I would contrive some way to give them a little live botany. They should see how much a flower meant to me. I would, so far as possible, let the child be his own teacher. One throb of love of nature, which you can awaken in the child's heart, is worth any number of dry facts which you can put into his head."

The principal of John Burroughs school, Miss Daisy Charters, and her teachers, are trying to carry out the spirit of the teachings of John Burroughs by planting and caring for hedges and shrubs of many kinds. A number of trees, mostly elms, have recently been purchased for the play ground, adding beauty to the grounds and comfort to the many children who play there.

Bureau of Juvenile Research is One of Three of its Kind in U. S.

That the State Bureau of Juvenile Research is located on the Hilltop is known to many but at the same time few realize that it is one of the three institutions of its kind in the country. For this reason the interest in it apparently is made greater.

At present there are about 120 children from various parts of the state at the bureau. Of this number there are about twice as many boys as girls. This may mean one of two things: boys are more mischievious than girls or there are more boys who are dependents throughout the state, for the bureau is for the purpose of observing and correcting cases of delinquency and dependency that are sent in by the various courts.

A tour through the buildings brings to light many things of interest. For instance we find that some of the boys are allowed certain individual rooms of their own. We also notice that the doors of these rooms are unusually heavy. The reason for this is that these same rooms were formerly used for the more unruly boys. What was once considered a punishment is now changed to be an honor.

As we enter the large room occupied by the girls, they happen to be seated around listening to the music from a phonograph. As an attendant greets them he is in return the recipient of numerous smiles and jovial greetings. The atmosphere is somewhat like that one would expect to find about a girls' dormitory at school.

The boys, peaceful in most respects, are more likely to be loud and probably are more noticed because of their numbers.

Large dining rooms and sleeping rooms as well as the school rooms are clean in every corner.

The bureau is equipped for any medical, dental or X-ray attention that is needed. Other equipment is complete in every detail.

During the stay at the institution, which may be from two to 18 months, the boy or girl is required at times

It's Glad Planting Time

Warm days of spring bring thoughts and desires to work in the soil and it also reminds us that ground should be prepared for the gladioli bulbs in order to have our flowers ready for the exhibits in the amateur growing class, such as the annual Hilltop Glad show which will be held here in the summer.

In the history of the floral world there have been very few varieties or species that have gained such popularity within the same space of time. Although the gladiolus was introduced in Britain in 1596 its extensive culture and development has been recent.

The reasons for such interest in the flower are many. It has a great variety of colors, is immune from disease, has long keeping qualities, is easily cared for, and has been found by florists and artists to be very easily worked into the most beautiful of flower designs.

The first days of May should be set aside as "glad" planting days for the amateur grower if he expects to get best results. Earlier planting may mean a loss of bulbs and later planting will cause the plants to be delayed in blooming for the exhibits.

However before the bulbs are actually placed in the ground a few other details should be cared for by the planter.

The spot for growing "glads" should be selected and work started in preparing it during April. Any good garden soil will produce the flowers providing there is plenty of sunlight on the spot. Enriching the soil may prove well if it is done in the right way. If the ground is broken in the fall a covering of manure will help it. Manure should not be used late in the spring before planting time though except in light quantities. Neither should fertilizers be placed about the bulb when planting because the tender shoots from the bulb will be too weak to withstand the additional strength of the ground.

The ground should be loosened to about six inches depth and the top layers raked into fine particles. If many bulbs are to be planted the plots should be about five feet wide with paths two feet wide running between them.

Large bulbs should have a foot between them and small ones about nine inches. The drills should be not less than three inches deep on heavy soil and four inches if the soil is light and sandy.

The bulb should then be placed into position and the soil drawn back with the top finished off smoothly with the rake.

As soon as the plants become visible they should be hoed and the soil loosened about them frequently thereafter. The weeds must be destroyed and the soil aerated.

Watering the plants is not advisable unless there is severe drought. Frequent use of the watering can or hose is also detrimental. Too much water will cause the plants to become yellowish and sickly.

When the plants are about a foot tall it may be advisable to support them by driving a small round stake into the ground close up to the root of the plants and tieing the top of the plant to the stake. This will keep them from being blown to the ground and will insure a straight stem.

The gladiolus must be remembered as the leader in the exhibition field and careful attention by the grower will produce blooms that are worthy of the competition found in amateur growers shows.

Bulbs planted all at one time, means that they will be blooming at one time. A worthy suggestion is to plant a few each week beginning early in May and continuing to July 1.

The amateur grower who visits the flower shows will be interested in buying a few of all kinds of bulbs. He will find however that he will have more success if caution is taken in selecting several of the cheaper bulbs and a few of the more expensive ones. A great variety is not desirable when planting on a small scale.

Every year new varieties are being produced and the "glad" world is fast becoming thickly populated with different kinds of blooms.

LET'S CLEAN UP AND PAINT UP

The Chamber of Commerce again launches its campaign for cleaning and painting up the city and ask that co-operation be given from all individuals over the city.

A similar campaign was sponsored last season and was found to be very successful in every detail. Tons of trash and waste material were gathered up.

Some of the things the campaign does are as follows: It creates community spirit. Places once cleaned up serve as an incentive to keep them cleaned up. Streets and alleys are cleaned up and are kept clean thereafter. Fire traps are razed and fire losses are reduced through the removal of the waste and trash. Landscaping is renewed and trees are planted. Homes are cleaned and beautified inside and out. Garages and fences are painted and repaired.

Furthermore such cleaning destroys breeding places of disease. Property values are also increased and it advertises the city.

Because of being apart from the dirt of the manufacturing section the Hilltop has become one of the cleanest sections in the city. However, here is a chance for every resident to add to the beauty of the community.

Refuse collectors will visit every home in the city during these two weeks of the campaign and all surplus waste materials and trash should be available at the time.

Let's keep the Hilltop clean.

THINKING AHEAD

One of the greatest living baseball players a few months ago attributed his success to being able to "think ahead." He anticipates situations and is not taken unawares. He has found out that it pays to do his "after thinking" beforehand.

Short views invite disaster. The explorer who undertakes to discover the South Pole commits suicide by failing to think ahead. Likewise, he who sets out upon the long trail of life is bound to lose if he does not anticipate the crises which lie along the way.

Education is an aid to thnking ahead, for a knowledge of the past helps us to appreciate the problems which we may expect to face in the future. Faith is supremely essential; without faith, knowledge is futile in meeting the situations which are ahead of us.—Forward.

Residents of Westgate and Broadview additions have asked that a new elementary school be built in their section. Considering that the other nearby elementary schools are nearly always crowded it appears that the proposal is worthy of careful consideration since that part of the city is growing rapidly. It cannot be very long until the building will have to be provided.

A merchant asks for a way to be reminded to give tickets with purchases from his store and another replies that he should tell the customer to remind him, before the sale is made. The customer shouldn't overlook them.

These April showers may be good after all in aiding the cleanup campaign. But they aren't helping get the garden planted.

Springtime for the landlord is the time when the requests for new wall paper and house painting are predominant.

Some of these rainy days remind us of the day we always expect to have for the Hilltop picnic.

The Spectator

"The jazz dance is making for health, fitness and a new type of beauty."

Popular Songs

Just now as I sit writing this account of the happenings of the Club and while Jack Wordley is waiting for me to start off with him for a function in which he has a part at the university this evening, there comes over the radio, as Jack turns the dials to while away the time, the tune of "When Summer is Done," and what more could I think of than to wonder if summer is ever going to come.

The next number on the program happens to be "Wedding Bells Are Breaking Up That Old Gang of Mine." Here again is food for thought and I see what the radio is doing to recall the old gang and the cause of its breaking up.

Immediately following, the announcer gives a further reason for the old gang breaking up in "A Bungalow, a Radio and You."

The Old Ones Come Back

A few hours spent in listening to the radio brings to ones mind the days of a short period ago. Again are the old favorites coming back for another try and perhaps very well that they are. It sometimes seems a waste of energy that so many songs should live for such a little time.

However a great variety of song hits and musical creations are needed in order to supply the demands of radio listeners. A few of such would soon become monotonous if they were heard repeatedly over the many stations the average listener will tune in on in one evening. This is the reason for the old songs coming back again.

Musical Money

Dancing dollars, you might call the money the song writer gets for his creations. Hundreds of songs are written yearly and millions of copies are sold to the ever willing public that awaits the latest "red hot hits." And a tidy little sum do these producers receive

A certain amount of popularity, too, must go with success in the popular song writing game but for the one who is not successful in maintaining his success this fame is not long lasting. This is true because his song is sure to die a natural death like others have

Short Life of Song

That the modern jazz song has a very short life one can figure out by a comparison of those played six months ago and those that are heard today.

Indeed much credit is due to the writer of "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," for the continued popularity it has known. Perhaps it stands in a field by itself in this respect.

Who remembers but a short time ago when "Barney Google," and "Yes, We Have No Bananas," were popular? Then came the "Ain't Gonna Rain No More" hit which serves now only as a basis for parody.

Although the rain has since fallen in great torrents and other authors have tried their hand at fixing the leak by developing other wet songs, today there is a great need for a rain ballad. Likewise there is room for another fruity favorite and also the horse racing fever might well inspire someone to give us another stable song.

What Is Jazz?

Jack Wordley, told some members of the Club recently that a girl friend had given him the best definition of jazz he had been able to find. Said she, it is that music, if such it can be called, which stops in the middle

They certainly are far from unfinished symphonies," was the reply of Red Pullin.

A Defense

Jack Wordley being better able to defend jazz was asked by Red Pullin what he would say in its favor and the reply came thus:

"It is true that the old form dances could not be tripped with grace on the ball room floor to the strains from a modern jazz band. But after all the gracefulness that was demonstrated in such dances was truly very stiff whereas the modern youthful couple are benefitted by the exercise they get from the dance.

"In the long run this is what counts more than any beauty of the dancing steps produced by the old time favorites. The jazz dances make for health and physical fitness along with a new type of beauty."

Indicate Presence of Oil

The Geological survey says that an anticline is an upfold in rocks, and such a fold in deposits, that are buried beneath formations of more recent geological age that were not subjected to the folding, cannot be detected at the surface. Such upfolds—called "anticlines"—are regarded as favorable to the accumulation of oil and it is for this reason that oil prospectors endeavor to locate such structures.

One Way to Stop War

There will one day spring from the brain of science a machine or force so terrible in its potentialities, so absolutely terrifying, that even man, the fighter, who will dare torture and death in order to inflict it, will be appalled, and so will abandon war forever.—Thomas A. Edison.

Spring Ultimatum

Linguistic Lines

Interest in Linguistic lines continues to grow. It is not an easy matter to pick the winners from the increasing number of excellent lines coming in each week.

Anyone reading the four lines below will appreciate the keen rivalry between contestants.

First prize of one dollar is awarded to Miss Leola Thompson of 380 Midland Ave. Miss Thompson sent us three lines this week and would have claimed both prizes except for grammatical weakness in her second line She says,

Saucy Sue's sulpy sneaky sister
Sally Sarah, saw Sue's sweet sixteen shy suitor, shy Seth Small, sshyly squeeze snickering Sue, saying soothingly Sue surely suits shyly squeeze snickering Sue, say.

Second prize of fifty cents is awarded to Miss Mary Wiseman, 2378 Valley View Drive. Her line is,

Fashion favors Fanny Fall's fancy, frilly frocks, for Fanny's fads frequently foretell fashion's festive fixings; forthwith fate falls flat for Fanny's frivolous flatterings.

Miss Wiseman sent us two lines, her second line deserving mention. It says,

Anne always acts abruptly about anything and after acting abruptly anxiously awaits any analysis about Anne's actions, and actually announces another act accordingly.

We like the line sent in by Frances Helmbrecht so well that we want to pass it on to our readers. Frances who lives at 152 N. Park Ave., says,

Bill, Bob's brother, broke buddy's ball bat batting Bob's ball, but brother Bill brought Bob's ball bat bidding Billie bat Bob's ball.

Some entries were received late Monday afternoon but due to the necessary absence of the judge, they will be held until next week for competition

Comet Found

The year's third comet has recently been discovered by an astronomer at Capetown South Africa. In accordance with the usual practice, it will be known after the discoverer as Forbe's Comet. When first observed, on November 21, Forbe's Comet was in the constellation of the Corvus, going in a southeasterly direction, so that it will soon be entirely out of the skies visible from northern countries. At the time of its discovery it was of the sixth magnitude, just on the verge of naked-eye visibility on a dark night. Later reports show that the comet is growing fainter, so that it is probably moving away from the earth.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT
By F. A. WALKER

BELIEVE IN YOURSELF

The individual who lacks belief in himself, who approaches his daily duties timidly, fearing that he is destined to blunder and thus make a failure of his work, will find it difficult to gain and hold the confidence of others.

The man or woman whose heart is always troubled with doubt is deficient of the fundamental elements of success.

He or she is forever striving against a formidable handicap which in most cases is merely imaginary.

Some persons well equipped by education and experience for the work which they are doing are even so foolish as to give it up in moments of discouragement and start off in a new quest.

They are victims of a weakness which they should by every possible means strive to overcome.

And strange to say, this weakness prevails to a larger extent among men and women of real ability than it does among the ignorant, proving in a small measure that "ignorance is bliss."

The shy skater is apt to be afraid to try the thin ice, but the venturesome fellow doesn't care a whoop whether he breaks or not.

In love as in war, it is generally the man who believes in himself that wins. And so it is in the pursuit of wealth and fame, often elusive to the timid, but easily captured by the stout-hearted who refuse to admit defeat.

But there is a vast difference between genuine confidence which the egotist sees through distorted spectacles.

The former, the altogether right sort, is the steadfast, unshaken sort, which most of us need to spur us on to greater usefulness, to ourselves and to others.

One is a kind of lie which poisons everything it touches; the other is fraught with virus, uplifting, hopeful, certain and as strong as the rock of ages, which we all may acquire if we go about its acquirement in the right spirit.

We almost break our necks to get a job, but when we sit down to it and face the serious responsibilities it brings with it, our courage oozes out and we find ourselves face to face with fear.

The thing to do when this foolish fear manifests itself is to summon confidence, take up our work, believe in ourselves and go through it unshaken to the very end.

If we do this steadfastly our confidence will grow so strong that neither height nor depth, nor any frowning creature of fright can daunt us or make us afraid when we are put to the severest test.

High-Grade Dairy Products from Columbus' Leading "INDEPENDENT" MILK COMPANY

A 100% Columbus Owned Industry

To meet the repeated requests of our many friends and former customers, now residing on the "Hilltop," we are pleased to announce the establishment of delivery service of our high grade dairy products in your neighborhood.

The Independent Milk Company was organized in 1924, by a group of local men, who realized the need of a reliable, modern "independent" milk company, which would more readily realize its responsibility in supplying the consuming public, with a bottle of milk, that would be higher in quality, strictly fresh, and carry the maximum guarantee of safety.

A modern, but modest, plant was erected, fully equipped with the latest type of sanitary equipment, manned with men with a thorough knowledge and experience in producing, processing and merchandising dairy products. To insure maximum freshness and safety a supply was developed from inspected and approved farms, located within quick hauling distance of the city.

The result of the entire program was a perfectly pasteurized bottle of milk, of such outstanding quality, that together with an efficient delivery service, in the short space of five years, has built a business that is today the leading 100% Columbus owned milk company in the city.

Our line of dairy products is complete, including besides our perfectly pasteurized milk, Golden Jersey Grade A Raw Milk, exceedingly high in butterfat, rich single and whipping cream, plain and deliciously creamed butter milk, high grade creamery butter, creamed cottage cheese, and chocolate syrup.

You are cordially invited to avail yourself of this opportunity to secure these products of such outstanding quality, and delivered to your home, fresh daily, with a service that is both prompt and courteous, and we ask you not to forget, that your patronage of the Independent Milk Company helps boost and support the leading 100% Columbus owned milk company in the city.

Starling Boys Study in New "Wood" Dept.

Every boy in the seventh grade, or above, of Starling Junior High school, has the opportunity of taking a course in "wood." This course includes a study of pattern making and carpentry.

The boys will have the opportunity to make anything from a breadboard to the finest type of furniture, such as bookcases, chests, different types of tables, dressers and dressing tables, candlestick lamps will also be made, due to the installation of some of the latest and best turning lathes in the city.

Mr Richard Gubsch is head of the wood department.

to take various examinations for observation by the attendants. The tests in many respects are simple but require attention in order to be performed with speed and accuracy.

Several picture completion tests are favorites. An example of such is a board with several pictures of a boy in various activities during the day. A block is left open in the picture to be filled with the proper block from a large number that are on the table. In the first picture for instance the boy is seen eating and looking up to the blank space which happens to be on the wall. On the table are some school books.

It is obvious that a clock belongs in the empty space. There happens to be three clocks. One is an alarm clock, another is a wall clock at 4:30 and the other is a wall clock at 8:30. A little thought will lead the child to put the 8:30 clock in the space because the boy is evidently eating breakfast before school time.

The Stenquist assembling test is another interesting one in which several simple mechanical devices are torn down and the child is required to assemble them. A door lock, a mouse trap and a bicycle bell are examples.

If one is doubtful as to the child's ability to select theme topics of interest what think you of the following one, found tacked to the wall as an example of a good paper: "The Foot and the Fist of a Fool." The theme though simple, shows promise, and was written by a nine-year dependent from Dayton.

Only observation and actual contact with the children sent to the bureau give a person knowledge of what their home life and background must have been.

ALUMNI GROUP TO SEE PLAY

"Road to Yesterday" to Be Presented Tonight at West High School.

Members of the West High School Alumni Association have purchased a block of seats downstairs in the West High school auditorium for the opening performance of the "Road to Yesterday" to be presented by the graduating class of the school tonight. The play will be repeated tomorrow night.

The play is full of color and tuneful choruses abound in humor and quaint situations.

Mr. Lee Leahy and Miss Marcella Crain are the coaches of the production and Mr. Herbert Hutchinson is directing the orchestra. Miss Helen Skeele of the domestic art department has supervised the making of the costumes. The stagecraft class under the direction of Mr. Herbert Campbell has assisted with the making of the scenery.

A large chorus of boys and girls takes part in the production. The school orchestra will furnish the music.

LIBRARY SETS NEW TIME LIMIT

Recent Books at Hilltop Branch to Be Issued for Week Only.

Beginning this week a special time limit will be placed on all new books at the Hilltop Library. To give a greater number of patrons the pleasure of reading the books one week will be allowed for each issue.

This one week limit applies only to books published within the last six or eight months depending upon the popularity of the book. The librarian will call attention to this fact when such books are selected.

Miss Faith Wolf, librarian, states that many men and women of the community are making use of the library even though they cannot visit it during the day. They are sending their children or small brothers and sisters to the library for lists of books. The assistants at the branch are willing and anxious to give this extra service when possible.

Says Miss Wolfe, "We want people to telephone the library for desired information, whether it be a date, a fact, a name, a place or what not. We would like to render more of these services. We want to be indispensible to this community."

Stop Parking

Standards have been erected on both sides of Eureka, Park and Oakley avenues south of Broad street last week to prohibit parking. No parking will be allowed unless 30 feet from the corner. This is done in order to insure a complete turn being made without striking a parked car. City council voted such action several weeks ago.

Drill Team Takes Trip

The drill team of Westwood Pythian Sisters under the leadership of Mrs. Elsie Van Meter, and the D. O. K. K. drill team under the leadership of Robert Swigert motored to Marysville Thursday evening for a pot luck dinner and entertainment. An address was given by J. G. Spears, a member of Westwood K of P. Both teams put on fancy drills.

Annual Spring Dance

The annual spring dance of Westgate Masonic Lodge will be held tonight at Westgate Temple at 8:30. Marlands orchestra will furnish the music. The dance is for all members and their families.

She Wanted a Painter

Last week a lady applied at the Record office for a copy of the paper saying she wanted a painter and knew that the Want Ad section had the telephone number of a man who had recently done some work for her.

Another instance of how want ads in the Record pay, is shown by the fact that a wall paper cleaner advertised and on the following week changed his ad because he was getting too much work.

The Record gives you 7200 chances to tell your story to the Hilltop residents. Bring your ads in or leave them at one of the stations.

PASTOR RESIGNS

REV. L. E. ELFORD

Rev. Elford, pastor of the Warren Avenue Church of the Nazarene has resigned his post to accept a call to the First Church of the Nazarene at Dayton, Ohio. He has been on the Hilltop for nearly six years.

He came to the Highland Avenue Friends church, nearly six years ago. He received into church membership at the Friends church 150 members during four years.

During his ministry at the Warren Avenue church for the past two years there have been over one hundred new members added.

A farewell service will be held at the church in his honor Monday evening at 7:30. The public is invited.

CIVIC MATTERS TOPIC OF GREEN

Councilman Says Street Car Situation Should Be Approached From Business Standpoint.

Street car service and the gas rate were topics brought before the meeting of the Eleventh Ward Republican Club, Inc., when addressed by Councilman Floyd Green Friday evening at the Hillcrest Baptist church.

Mr. Green pointed out that he felt the street car situation should be considered from a business standpoint and that it is only fair that some profit should revert from the operation of any business. If the car company cannot make a profit under the present rates they should be increased.

Regarding the gas situation he pointed out that the proposal of the gas company will provide a sliding scale charge running over a period of four years with service charge extra. At the end of the four years the company would have the right to demand higher rates.

Green feels that there should be a minimum rate instead of a service charge. If council does not agree with the gas company this time the court will have to settle the case.

Miss Marie Hoar presided in the absence of the president.

Girl Enters Contest to Draw B. M. Insignia

Genevieve Hartman, a junior at West High school is the only girl to enter the contest sponsored by the Hilltop Business Men's Association to draw an insignia for the association.

The time of the insignia contest has been extended and a definite date will be announced next week.

Few entries have been received from the students for the $5 prize. All entries should be in the office of the Hilltop Record by Friday, 5 p. m.

Chorus Coming

The Grotto Chorus under the direction of Bert Linn will sing at the special program to be given at the Hillcrest Baptist church Tuesday evening. Hilltop Record to Pass 12-Year Mark Saturday

624 Issues Printed and Never Been Late; Grows From 2000 to 7200.

Another year has passed and on Saturday the Hilltop Record will celebrate its twelfth anniversary. During the period there have been 624 issues of the paper distributed to Hilltop people. Furthermore the paper has grown from its original size of four pages, four columns wide to a seven-column paper with from six to eight pages each week, each page of which is larger than the total of the original paper.

Back in April 27, 1917, S. J. Westlake, founder of the publication, in his shop at 101 N. High St., in the Wesley Block, had just completed the printing of the first issue of the paper on a large job press which he is running at present at his shop at 2354½ W. Broad St. He moved to that location in June following the first issue of the Record.

The first issue contained $19 worth of advertising, recalls Mr. Westlake. There were 2000 of the papers issued then and by the time it had been put through the press for the four times that were necessary he had spent 10 hours at the press. At present 7200 papers are printed in about three hours.

Printers in the Wesley Block of which there were seven at the time, predicted that the paper would never survive but in the past 12 years it has never missed an issue and never been late.

Myers and son, of North Eureka avenue, passed the papers at the time.

From the first issue of the paper we note that the following merchants who are in business at present were advertisers: Sellier's, Fred L. Stalsberger, W. L. Milliken, Charles Houx, T. C. Mitchell, West Side Lumber Co., Umbenhaur's Drug Store, Hyman Cleaning Co., and the Economy Variety Store.

"The Hilltop is not experiencing a boom, but a good, substantial growth," says a headline over a story telling of the growth of the community and the number of new homes that were being built.

The business meeting held in the auditorium was presided over by J. G. Collicott, superintendant of public schools. Addresses were given by Dr. Jessie Charters of Ohio State university, E. E. Garwick, principal of Livingston Avenue school and J. H. Phillips, superintendant of Lancaster schools.

HIGHLAND SCHOOL HIGH IN BANKING

Highland Avenue school has made steady progress this semester in school banking. In this matter the goal is a large percentage of pupils banking, rather than a large amount of money deposited. This week Miss Barry's room banked 100 per cent, the first any room had reached this mark yet this term. The school as a whole is averaging about 60 per cent, to which mark it has gradually climbed from a rating of 33 per cent at the beginning of the semester.

This week the different rooms are working on Arbor Day projects. Each room is selecting some one thing in the way of improving the grounds and is devising its own plans for carrying it out.

Camp Ro-Fre-La With 13 Days of Fun Lure Scouts

Boy Scouts of the Columbus Council are rapidly filling the few vacancies left for the first and second periods (June 22 to July 20) at Camp Ro-Fre-La. The fact that 13 days of fun in this rendezvous can be obtained for $12 in camp saving stamps, has led many Scouts to rush with the first dollar's worth to local headquarters to sign up.

The campers are all looking ahead to the possibility of initiation into White Swastika. The swimming pool will be all ready, and the tennis courts will be in good condition. Louie Dandridge will start off with the usual Ro-Fre-La mean that holds boys at the table.

Leather jackets promise to be all the rage this year, and every Scout will want to make a bow and arrows of his own, too, before he leaves camp. Swimmers are planning to become lifesavers, and the boys who can't swim have resolved they'll learn if it takes all four periods of camp. The nature enthusiasts are already getting their cameras, nets and various collecting paraphernalia together.

Ro-Fre-La was rated one of the foremost camps of the country in its second year, receiving an "A" grade rating with 70 additional points.

One Stray Alley Cat Brings Three Cents At Youngsters' Sale

Three youngsters of about the age of five years each and with an eye for business transacted a sale that was note worthy last week and perhaps aided the community in the clean-up week now in progress.

In their wanderings in an alley back of their homes, they came upon a stray cat, a new arrival in the neighborhood. Believing the animal to be of use or perhaps a worthy playmate, they carried him farther and arrived on the main street.

A lady of a nearby street reports that she saw the quartet and inquired if she might not have the cat. One of the children spoke up saying that such might be for the price of a penny.

But there were three of them. How far would one penny go in such a case?

"We'll all have to have a penny," interrupted another spokesman.

And so, the lady having need of a cat to clean up the mice about her home, searched her pocketbook for pennies. But one was to be found. She visited her home nearby and secured the other two pennies for which she received the prize of the alley and three South Eureka avenue youngsters trailed home with candy suckers and their first experience in salesmanship. The boys were Warren Sidney Lanthorne, Paul Proper and Bobby Sherron.

Democrats Elect Mrs. Charles Stout

Mrs. Charles Stout was elected president of the Tenth Ward Women's Democratic Club Friday night at the meeting held at the home of Mrs. W. A. Bach, 470 Hilltonia Ave.

Mrs. Bach was named vice president. Other officers are: Mrs. Olive Worrell, secretary, and Mrs. Cora Wilkins, treasurer.

MANY INJURED IN ACCIDENT

Man Thrown 15 Feet After Coming in Contact With Live Wire Sunday.

Those injured by automobiles and in other accidents on the Hilltop during the past week set a new record for the period. When he came in contact with a live wire Sunday, Ray Gesmer, 20, 241 Midland Ave., suffered possible internal injuries and was thrown 15 feet. He was at work for the Berney Bond Glass Co. He was taken to Mercy hospital.

Catharine Thompson, 6, and Alice Putman, 7, both of 381 S. Hague Ave., suffered injuries Saturday afternoon when they were struck by the automobile driven by Joseph Holycross, near Hague and Broad streets. The former was taken to Mt. Carmel hospital for treatment. Alice suffered minor injuries.

VARIOUS GOOD THINGS

Those who are fortunate enough to live where the delicious shad may be served fresh on their tables also enjoy the shad roe in season. Other roe may be used and is really very appetizing if one is not already used to shad.

To prepare it it must be fresh from the water if possible. Plunge at once into boiling water to which a little salt and a tablespoonful of lemon juice or vinegar has been added. This keeps it from spoiling and makes it firm. Cook gently for ten minutes then remove from the water with a skimmer; drop into ice water to chill then drain and it is ready to be cooked in different ways.

Baked Shad Roe

Parboil the roe, drain it and lay on a buttered tin plate. Dredge with pepper and salt, spread soft butter over it and then cover with flour lightly dredged over it. Bake thirty minutes, basting frequently with water, butter, pepper and salt, dusting with flour after each basting.

Broiled Roe

When ready to cook split lengthwise and brush over with cooking oil, broil over a clear fire or under gas. Serve with maitre d'hotel butter, hot baked potatoes, crisp radishes, hot rolls and coffee.

Baked Shad Roe With Cream Sauce

After preparing the roe place it in a buttered casserole. Make a good cream sauce, using two tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour and a pint of milk; stir and cook until thick, add salt and pepper. Pour four tablespoonfuls over the roe and cover and bake twenty minutes. Uncover and pour on more of the sauce, bake twenty minutes longer, basting frequently. At last pour the last of the sauce over and when hot serve.

Why We Do What We Do

by M. K. THOMSON, Ph. D.

WHY WE HAVE INSTINCTS

We have instincts because we are animals. In so far as we live on the animal level we live by our instincts. In so far as we live a life of reason, which is decidedly a human prerogative, we get away from instincts.

This will explain a very important difference as well as a very close likeness between human beings and lower forms of life. Animals and insects live wholly by instincts. Therefore their life is a matter of rigid mechanisms. The bird builds her nest without previous training and builds it as her ancestors have built before her.

The acts of the bees and other insects and animals sometimes appear intelligent but there is no reasoning power back of them because animals do not really think. They do all these wonderful things by instinct. Instinct in the animal is purely a matter of reflex activity. One sort of activity leads to another and that to another until the act is completed.

No one knows how instincts originated. It is supposed that they were picked up somewhere along the line of progress, that the individuals who were best able to meet competition lived to reproduce their kind and thus the more capable ones continued to live on. Instincts are inherited. They are persistent tendencies to activity.

As human beings we have instincts to start us on our career but we soon learn many new ways of satisfying the instinctive cravings. Nevertheless these instincts, though greatly modified in expression, remain throughout life to urge us to undertake certain types of activity. They furnish the chief motive force. Intelligence and experience merely find new and varied ways of realizing these ends. This the animal cannot do.

You'll do better at Seiller's after all.

The majority of all diseases are due to some derangement of the nervous system. Every tissue in the body is supplied with a nerve force and if it is interfered with it will not do its work and sickness will result.

All nerves are associated with the spine and an abnormal position of any one segment will produce a nerve pressure, which may or may not be felt in the spine, but will be felt in the tissues or organ supplied by the nerve which is interfered with.

If you are suffering in any way, you should have your spine examined by a competent chiropractor. If I cannot help you I will tell you so.

AN ANNIVERSARY AND A POLICY

This week marks the twelfth anniversary of the Hilltop Record and for the past 12 years the paper has been issued regularly every week without being late or delayed. It is now an established institution on the Hilltop.

Starting as a small sheet when the Hilltop was in its infancy the future for the paper was hardly realized. During these intermediate years as the community has grown the paper has likewise taken rapid strides in order to continue giving the residents of the Hilltop a better paper.

At this point it is fitting that appreciation should be expressed to the residents of the community and the local merchants for their continued support and interest. In return we are glad to state that the paper will continue to endeavor to serve in a manner that may be pleasing to all.

It is our policy that the interests of the community should come first. We are anxious at all times to be of aid to the residents. Furthermore we are striving to offer every home the news of the Hilltop in such a way that it may be of interest to them and tend to bind their loyalty to the community.

We have not attempted to play up the sensational but have tried to stand for what we believe to be right and what is pleasing to the greatest number. Service can only consist in satisfying others.

This is everyones paper. We are anxious that each individual, whether man, woman or child, shall feel free to call upon us to render service either directly to them or to the community. We want to take a broad-minded attitude in making our policy a liberal one.

During the coming years we have hopes of further growth as the Hilltop grows. Your suggestions as to improvements will be greatly appreciated. Your co-operation is asked in that you give us tips as to news of interest.

The paper is not merely an advertising sheet. We are proud to say that the contents must be of interest to residents of the community. This fact we base on requests for the paper from time to time.

The paper is free to all who are residents of the Hilltop and we will appreciate any reports of homes that have not been receiving it each week.

We are looking forward to another bigger and better year in issuing a community paper to the best community in "good old Columbus town."

Congratulations are in order to the men who have given their efforts to organize a post of the American Legion on the Hilltop. May we extend such to them and wish them success.

Too many merchants are in the habit of not observing every day as clean-up time and allowing the sidewalks in front of their stores to become littered with dirt and trash.

The Spectator

Is it not better to belong to a high trade than a low profession?"

Who Makes the Newspaper?

Professor Tittle, knowing my interest in newspapers, asked what I thought of the future for a person on a newspaper staff. My answer of course was but a resume of what has been happening in the field and what the tendency seems to be. I brought out the following points:

If a person expects to go to work on the editorial or reportorial staff of any good newspaper he must of course start at the bottom unless he has had some degree of experience in the past. For the reporter who starts to work on a city daily he may at first receive such a low salary as $15 per week. Some have even been put off at $12. This is very low we must all admit and one may wonder how the person can live on that amount.

It is then that we must stop to think who should receive the largest salaries in any newspaper. One of the first questions is, "Who makes the newspaper?"

The Answer

The answer to such a question is to be found in a further question. "Why do people buy newspapers?" It is obvious that they are used for something other than to wrap lunches in. The news that they contain is the only reason for their sale.

This being true it is further obvious that the reporter and the news gathering machinery are absolute essentials to success.

It may be said that the advertising makes the paper pay and that the man who brings in the money should be paid accordingly but on the other hand we must stop to consider what kind of an advertising medium the paper would be without live and interesting material. How many merchants would advertise at high rates if the paper did not contain news of interest? How many people would read a modern size newspaper with nothing but ads in it?

What Is Being Done

Very few newspaper men on the reportorial staff are receiving high salaries. Perhaps when the cub takes his first post on he has hopes of rising to a position similar to that held by O. O. MacIntire or Heywood Broun. But the truth of the matter is that he must be exceptionally good if he gets up to the $50 or $60 per week basis. Some special reporters and news gatherers are receiving as high as $125 per week but they are very few. they are very few.

In the advertising departments of the newspapers competent men are getting from $40 to $60 per week "because they are bringing in the money."

Men in the composing departments are receiving as good if not better salaries.

Editorial writers and higher officials are getting higher salaries because they, as all executives and policy setters should be paid higher.

But the man on the desk, who has the responsibility of correcting the news and judging its value is like the porter, in the low salary class.

What May Be Done

That the reporter and desk men are the lowest paid men on the staff is apparent and most any publisher will tell you such. The truth of the matter is that the reporter and news gatherer should be the highest paid because they are the ones who make the paper and are also the ones who represent the paper publicly. What wide-awake business man would think of sending his representative into the field to meet the public when he was slovenly dressed or not neat in his appearance?

This is just what the publisher is doing of his public representatives. There will be a change in such though it is thought.

Those who are not getting the best of the deal are demanding more and if necessary they will organize like labor unions and strike for their just pay and consideration. But then we say that would make their work a trade and not a profession. What about it? Is it not better to belong to a high trade than a low profession?

What the Public Thinks

The ordinary newspaper reader will tell you that the reporter is just a person who makes mistakes and very few of them are really known to be popular.

The public believes the reporter to be a person of low standing and one that is not fit for higher position and one that will not be capable of advancement.

But such is a thing of the past. Even the newspaper is following the steps of other big business and hiring college graduates and experienced men for their open positions. A higher class of persons is required to be able to write the news that the educated populace of today is reading.

But with this demand of the public for better newspapers must also go the higher salary of the paper for its writers in order to attract the better men to their staffs.

Linguistic Lines

Linguistic Lines present two new points of interest this week. We received one from West Virginia, next another complete letter which began with, "Dear Dolly Dimple," and closed Devotedly, Dinah Dumby." Both of these lines took liberties with the rules of the contest so cannot be printed in full. We hope these contestants will try again. Another feature of this week's lines is a series of three good prize winning lines sent in by one contestant. Except for our policy of awarding only one prize to any one contestant we would have awarded both prizes to Miss Leola Thompson of 380 Millard Ave. For First Prize she says.

Pop Potter's pretty pert pet peg pup, Pub, pitilessly pursued prancing, perturbed Pansy Palmtree's panicky, panting Pekinese poodle past Pastor Prester's pasture.

Second prize goes to Mrs. H. A. Beckwith of 175 Bliss Blvd., for the following line.

Samuel Smith sought seashore surely surprising settlers seeking shrimps since shrimp salad seemed seasonable.

For Honorable Mention we wish someone would answer the following question for Miss Thompson who wins first prize this week. She asks.

Why wouldn't Willie White's white winged warbler whistle with Walter Weller, while Willie was watching with wistful waiting?

The rules for Linguistic Line contests are as follows: Write a simple complex or compound sentence, every word of which begins with the same letter of the alphabet.

A contestant may send in more than one line. Judging is based on grammatical unity, thought and length. It is better to send in a good short line than a poor long one. We hope our contestants enjoy writing linguistic lines as much as we enjoy reading them.

HERE and THERE
By C. C. H.

Perhaps Nero wasn't so much different than other males of today who fiddle around and let things burn up.

All is fair in love and war and now a Chicago judge has ruled that a man may clip the jaws of another man in company with an estranged wife provided the party of the first part is truly in love with the woman. Broken jaws may become common things at this rate.

Now that the king of the swat has taken unto himself a bride he is no longer one of the eligible possibilities of those who would marry fame, and its feminine admirers may be reduced in numbers this season.

Since Tom Mix's horse, Tony, can't talk, he has decided to withdraw from the movies for circus life.

Councilman Green predicted last week, while the cornerstone of the new city prison was being laid, that the city would have reached the million mark when the stone is removed. That is perhaps a bold statement considering the type of occupants the building will have.

Speaking of babies they have their little part to play in creating employment. Just consider the number of roomt doubles that must be on hand for the speaking parts. It is further proof that beauty may be only skin deep and not always from the skin of the teeth.

The tired business man has reason for being that way now that the golf and baseball seasons have opened.

What we need to get the people out in the business sections of his community are a few more shovels and some excavating to do.

ABOUT THE PORCUPINE

Billie Brownie had asked Mother Nature if he could call on a porcupine and hear something of the ways of the porcupine family. He asked her to give him the power that day and evening to understand porcupine talk. And Mother Nature agreed.

So Billie Brownie went forth to the dark woods and there he met a porcupine.

"Are you all alone?" asked Billie Brownie.

"All alone," said the porcupine, "I like to wander about by myself. I'm not so very sociable. None of us are, you know."

"I'm not really sure whether I know that or not," said Billie Brownie. "I don't know much about porcupines. I may as well be quite truthful and admit my ignorance."

"I'm not surprised at it," said the porcupine.

But the porcupine explained himself after a moment.

"I is not," he said, "because I think on are an ignorant creature, for I do

"I Like to Wander About by Myself I'm Not Very Sociable."

not. I feel sure you are filled with wisdom.

"But there are few who know much about porcupines.

"Now and again we squeal a bit or growl, but mostly we believe in being silent.

"Our mothers never have to say 'Hush' to us. We are so quiet by nature. And our mothers don't meet each other and chatter about the ways of their children. They, too, are so quiet.

"We sometimes wander where there are camps. We are a little more sociable then and we rather like to see people camping out in the great woods. We like to eat vegetables and bits of bark and twigs and fruit and oh, dear, now we do love salt!

"Everything should be flavored with salt, and we even like salt all by itself or things that just have a salty flavor or taste.

"Sometimes we stay a long time at the top of a tree, especially when it is cold. We keep to the top of a tree then as people will stay indoors. I was one of four little porcupines and it was not so very long before I started away from home to look out for myself. We are independent creatures and are not little and helpless when we are born.

"No, we are quite good-sized then and we are born with all our splendid quills. I suppose you know how incorrectly these quills and what they can do have been spoken about?"

"I think I know what you are going to say," Billie nodded, "but I would like to have you tell me again just how it is you act with those quills of yours."

"We swing our great spiny tails about and strike at the enemy and the quills stick into them. But we do not throw our quills. We have to touch the creature with them. So many think we throw our quills, and that is incorrect."

"That is about the only thing I have known about your family," said Billie Brownie.

"Well," said the porcupine, "the other day I was pretty mad. Some one said, 'Of what good are porcupines?'

"That was enough to make anyone angry, I think.

"Of course our flesh has been eaten and that has been considered good but that is not the way I'd speak of myself as being of any good.

"I would say, 'Ladies and gentlemen! Porcupines are of great good because they are. This is the simple porcupine explanation. As we are not great talkers we do not use many words and as we don't talk much, we don't have to think much, and that is satisfactory an explanation as I was brought up for all of you.'"

"Well," said Billie Brownie, "I think that is a good one. It satisfies me at any rate. And now, that the night is almost over, I must be off, for I have an engagement at dawn."

"Good-by," said the porcupine. "Your engagement at dawn doesn't sound so interesting, as we porcupines like the night time best of all."

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

SERVICE IN BUSINESS

Service in business means more than merely satisfying a public need. In an interesting lecture, "Acres of Diamonds," Dr. Russell Conwell relates an experience which occurred when he was a young man clerking in a store. A customer desired to purchase a jack knife, but there were no jack knives in the store for sale. Another customer who desired the same article left the store dissatisfied. By the time the third customer asked for the same article, plenty of jack knives were on the counter for sale.

When the public creates the demand which business must satisfy. Service implies more than just satisfying this demand. Service in business should route a spirit of good will, of personal interest, mutual trust and comradeship. Service demands not only that the customer be furnished with a jack knife when he asks for it, but also, that when he desires another one he will return to the same counter for it. The most important thing is not that a transaction was made that may have brought a profit to the dealer, but that through that satisfaction which the customer had in the transaction other people will be influenced to trade at the same place.

Service in business has a sort of plus value. It is a sort of spirit which satisfies a public in such a way that it creates good will. The old policy of "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" can no longer be the creed of a successful business career. Self-preservation is not the first law of life in the realm of human values, and business is more concerned with human than material values.

The most serious loss to any business concern is not money but satisfied patronage. In the competition of the modern business world where one concern endeavors to secure advantage at the expense of its competitor the element which ultimately wins is something more than the quality of the article produced; it is that, but also SERVICE on the higher levels, which creates confidence, mutual understanding, permanent satisfaction and good will.

FOR THE GOOSE—

Who would you rather foller through the woods—a guide that had been through before, or one with a hand-some uniform? Why not listen to your mother once in a while.

A man that a woman has just refused to kiss would—always rather think she was an iceberg than a volcano.

A man that'll learn to notice what his girl wears, don't need to ever be afraid of runnin' outa interestin' conversation.

Jealousy will often let a cat outa the bag that it took a thousand tricks to tie in.

A good healthy complexion is more ornamental than rings on your fingers and under your eyes.

Here Is Story of How Talking Pictures Are Made

Vitaphone is but two years old. Yet in that time it has revolutionized an industry and has transformed the world's most popular medium of entertainment—the motion picture.

It required courage, foresight and imagination to undertake the public introduction of Vitaphone which was to give a voice to the silent drama.

In August, 1926, Warner Bros., as licensees of the Western Electric Company, proclaimed themselves ready to present for public approval the most epoch-making development in screen history. Previous experiments in talking pictures from time to time had proved ludicrous failures. It was suspected that this demonstration would be just one more like the rest.

But Warner Bros.' faith in Vitaphone was not a shallow interest in endowing the screen with a voice to make it a temporary freak novelty.

First Heard in New York

The first audience to hear Vitaphone assembled at the Warner Theatre in New York. As they entered the playhouse on Broadway there was little enthusiasm for the experience that awaited for them. Then the house was darkened and there faded in on the screen the figure of Will Hayes. A moment later his voice on the Vitaphone was speaking, telling of the honor he felt as leader of the industry to indorse the marvelous device. At his first words there was a gasp of breathless astonishment. At last the illusion of speech in connection with the motion picture was real. A spontaneous burst of thunderous applause from the amazed spectators followed and Vitaphone was a success.

The system and apparatus employed by Vitaphone were developed by the Bell Telephone Laboratories and the Western Electric company. Through Vitaphone music, speech and song are electrically reproduced, as the performers seen on the screen appear to render it; music especially played to accompany a certain picture is electrically reproduced in synchronism with the action on the screen; and, in general, the visual and audible presentation of performers is given mechanically and electrically at any place or at any time, without their actual presence in the theatre or hall.

The sound vibrations created by the orchestra are picked from the air by microphones, which are placed out of the range of the cameras and yet within a few feet of the players. Where the rendition is that of a single singer or player one microphone is sufficient, but in the performances of large orchestras like the New York Philharmonic, six or more microphones may be used.

From the microphones the fluctuating electrical current passes through wires to the control room where it passes through an amplifying system. Amplifier panels of the Western Electric Public Address System type are used in this connection. Because the current set up by the fluctuations of sound pressure at the diaphragm of the microphone are too minute to operate the registering device which cuts the grooves on the soft wax disk which serves as a master record, this amplifier system is introduced to take the small current at its input end and by means of distortionless vacuum-tubes amplify it to the requisite strength. There is also a monitoring system here used in connection with regulating the total volume of sound, a volume indicator, and panels for testing purposes which having nothing directly to do with the registering equipment.

Soft Wax Record

From the amplifier system the current passes to the recorder. Here the fluctuating electrical current in translated into mechanical vibrations. These mechanical vibrations—faithful facsimiles of the sound vibrations which reacted on the diaphragm of the microphones—are recorded on a disk of soft wax by means of a stylus made of sapphire and shaped oval-fashion like the end of a spoon. By means of mechanical filters all extraneous vibrations are eliminated an the movements of the stylus are so governed that all tones are registered with fidelity

In order to synchronize the picture and the music perfectly, the camera and the turn table on which the master disk revolves (in another part of the studio building) secure their motive power from two alternating current motors of the synchronous type made to run at uniform speed. To record, the motors are started and gain full speed together and continue to run together. Connected to the recording arm is a suction tube which draws the cut wax particles up and away from the disk.

The operation of the reproducing apparatus is comparatively simple. The average moving-picture operator can be taught to handle the Vitaphone show in a week or less while the average theatre electrician can easily be taught to replace a bad vacuum tube or make minor adjustments in the apparatus. The turn-table is located immediately adjacent to the picture projector, both of which are driven by the same motor, the speed of which is controlled by a speed-control mechanism which keeps the speed constant. The electro-magnetic pick-up mechanism is attached to the turn table. The amplifier panels are compact and require but a very small amount of floor space. These are also installed in the projection booth and near enough to the projecting apparatus so that the operator can also handle the volume-control mechanism.

Four Horns Required

For the ordinary theatre two to four horns are sufficient. These horns are of the folded type, and if spread out would be twelve or more feet in length.

The electric motor can be run from the usual power supply. A battery room, however, near the projection room is needed for the vacuum tubes.

The actual operation is simple. The record is placed on the turntable; the needle set on the starting mark; the film threaded into the projection machine with the starting frame opposite the projector opening. The motor is then started and the film and the record are mechanically "run off" in synchronism. The mechanical vibrations of the needle are transformed into electrical current fluctuations which are, in turn, amplified and transformed into sound vibrations from the horns. The horns are so placed that the sound reaches the audience as though coming either from the persons depicted on the screen or, when the music is used only to accompany the cinema story, from the orchestra pit.

Vitaphone is now installed and in successful operation in more than 500 theatres throughout the country.

Old Idea Wrong

The old tradition that the royal road to efficiency is for everyone to come in at the bottom is now a delusion. The brain which is capable of being trained for highly skilled work is unusefully employed in the hewing of wood and drawing of water.—London Daily Telegram.

STONE FOR FIREPLACES

The bureau of standards says in regard to the use of lake shore pebbles or boulders in fireplaces there are certain types of stone which should not be placed where they will receive an intensity of heat. The firebox should be lined with firebrick, but many types of stone may be used in the facing and arch, where the heat is not great. Granite or quartz rock is usually the least resistant to heat, and may be cracked if placed where the fire may reach them. Sandstone, limestone or quartzite will withstand considerable heat without cracking.

Superstition Is Old

The superstition of lighting three cigarettes from one match arose from the custom of having three lamps on church altars in Russia; it was considered unlucky to light these three lamps from one taper, and the priests would not do so under any consideration.

The children had lost their father and there was talk of their mother's remarriage. The older daughters disapproved and were expressing doubts as to whether they would be any better off if this "new man" entered their lives.

The small brother listened seriously to the conversation, then offered this: "Don't you think he might bring in the kindling?"

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS
By H. IRVING KING

SHOOTING STARS

There are various superstitions connected with shooting stars or meteorites. In this country and in England the most common ones are that a "falling star" means a birth; and that if you wish when you see a star fall you will get your wish. The mystery of the heavenly bodies to the primitive mind caused them to be regarded as gods or the abodes of gods and endowed them with a living animal character as well as a spiritual one. And out of the belief that the stars in their course influenced human life sprang the pseudo science of astrology in which the position of the planets at the hour of a man's birth played so important a part—the casting of nativities or horoscopes.

From earliest times the mystery of earth and the mystery of the stars appear to have been joined in some way in the primitive mind. Naturally therefore primitive man saw in a falling star a celestial visitant from the realms of the gods; a new soul come to earth; as does the persistent primitive in man today when, seeing a shooting star one man remarks to another, "Hi! we'll hear of a birth in the neighborhood tomorrow."

Wishing on the shooting star is a remnant of the primitive tendency to star-deification. The meteorite is a god suddenly manifesting himself and to him you appeal for the fulfillment of your wish. This idea will be found in the beliefs of many savage peoples today; the New Zealand natives, for instance, say that a falling star is a god kicked out of heaven by a god stronger than himself.

Once in a while we run across the superstition that a falling start means not a birth but a death. This belief is prevalent in the Italian mountains and in northern continental Europe; and is sometimes found in this country. It comes from the old astrological idea that a man is "born under" a certain star with which his destiny is linked. When a meteorite plunges earthward, blazes and disappears, some one's star has fallen and gone out. Naturally the person whose star it is dies.

How It Started

THE CIRCUS

What a thrill for the youngsters in the announcement, "The circus is in town!" And grown-ups, too, are its eager patrons. The circus is a relic of a form of entertainment of the ancient Romans from whom it takes its name. The Latin "circus," meaning ring or circle, was the game given by the Romans to the space in which they held chariot races and contests.

It is a far cry, however, between the modern circus and the circus ring of ancient Rome, to which its ultimate origin is traced. The circus as we know it today did not come into existence until a few hundred years ago. The nearest approach to it up to that time is found in roving entertainers, acrobats, jugglers, exhibitors of skilled animals called in England "gleeman," presumably from the fact that they were supposed to produce joy and glee.

The circus came into its modern form with Philip Astley, born in 1742 at Newcastle-Under-Lyme. Originally a horseman of extraordinary skill, Astley built for his exhibitions the first modern circus ring in England, a great empty space surrounded by unroofed seats, and met with such great success in the venture that he became known as the "father of the modern circus."

The famous circus man in America, of course, was Barnum. But though Barnum developed the circus to an extent never before known, he was not, as was Astley in England, its originator here. The first circus performance showman was one Thomas Pool.

Early Days Of County Are Recalled

First Residents Had Hard Time Making Living With Few Rough Tools.

The industry of the Franklin county pioneers was indefatigable, their courage abundant and their fortitude in meeting the hardships and privations of life in the backwoods worthy of great praise, according to the historical and agricultural data of Franklin county recently compiled by Charles V. Truax, State Director of Agriculture.

Quoting a writer on the settlement of the county, the report says further:

"During all the early years of the settlement of the county, varied with occasional pleasures and excitements, the great work of increasing the tillable ground went slowly on.

"Farm implements and tools were scarce, but the soil that had long held in reserve the accumulated riches of centuries, produced splendid crops, handsomely rewarding the pioneers' labors.

"Only the commonest goods were brought into the country, being floated down the Ohio to the mouth of the Scioto and these sold at extortionate rates.

TEA COST $3 PER POUND

Tea sold for $2 and $3 a pound long after the Scioto Valley had been settled as far as Columbus. Coffee sold for 75 cents to $1 a pound; salt $5 to $6 per bushel of 50 pounds and the cheapest calico $1 a yard.

"But all their hardships were cheerfully borne by the first settlers who made the best of what they had. They toiled patiently on, simple in their mode of living but happy in independence, however dearly bought, and looking ever hopefully forward to a future of plenty which should reward them for the toil of earliest years."

MOUND BUILDERS HERE

In an address years ago, General John Beatty drew a picture of what is now Franklin county in the days of the Mound Builders, a thousand to 3,000 years ago, when the Scioto river was a great thoroughfare of the ancient race, its banks dotted with homes and populous villages. Many centuries later the Red Men came and established their villages in this region one of these was at the confluence of the Scioto and Olentangy when the traders, explorers and surveyors came. There were extensive fields of corn on the river bottoms.

The great flood of 1798 inundated the lots in Franklinton, laid out the previous year by Lucas Sullivant, making it necessary for him to extend it to higher ground.

JAIL COST $80

April 3, 1803, the same year that Ohio became a state, Franklin county was formed and Franklinton became the seat of justice. The log jail erected the following year cost $80. Four years later a brick court house was erected at Franklinton.

An incident is narrated of Lyne Starling, who after joining his brother in-law, Lucas Sullivant, at Franklinton, proceeded to secure land on higher ground on the east bank of the Scioto and headed the company which in 1812 induced the Ohio legislature to make Columbus, still a wilderness, the state capital.

CLOTHES EXCHANGED

Some years after the new town of Columbus was established, there was litigation over the title to some of the Starling lands. Starling who was 6 feet, 7 inches tall, a fine specimen of young manhood, had indulged along with others, one of them, a little man, joined him in taking a sleep. Presently a crowd arrived to congratulate him upon the successful issue of the law case. Roused from slumber he and the little man got their clothes mixed. Starling appearing before the crowd in garments that he could scarcely get into, while the little man was lost in the clothes of his tall friend.

INDIANS CAPTURE GIRL

Among the stories of the early settlement of what is now Franklin county is one about the seizure of little Keziah Hamlin by a band of Wyandot Indians. Keziah was the first white girl to be born in Columbus. She was sleeping in her sugar trough cradle in the Hamlin cabin while her father was away to mill and her mother was busy, when a band of Indians came and carried her away to the dense forest. The mother was frantic with fear for the fate of the child but a few hours later the tiny maid was brought home adorned in Indian finery including a pair of buckskin moccasins. She lived to old age, dying in 1875, and always prized the tiny moccasins the Indians made for her.

According to statistics, Canada is the largest producer of nickel, asbestos, and cobalt.

TO GET RID OF MICE

To banish mice put camphor in the places they frequent. Holes should be stopped with putty after mustard has been mixed.

The portrait of Dante by Giotto is the earliest likeness of the Renaissance period.

The Doctor Says:

"Most corns, calluses, bunions, etc., are caused by friction. Loose shoes cause about as much trouble as tight shoes. Weak arches often develop from lack of balance and side sway."

The Doctor Shoe

fits the heel and instep snugly. This prevents sliding and friction. The arch support feature is of the bandage type, holding the bones gently but firmly in position without restricting the action of the muscles of the foot. The "balance" of the shoe is toward the inside—feet straight ahead—so you place your weight where it should be, and you get "spring" in your step.

The story is too long to tell in print. Just try on a pair of Doctor Shoes. Let your feet be the judge.

A new and better shoe experience awaits you.

Ship Lays 200 Miles of Cable Per Day

The largest and fastest cable-laying ship in the world, the Dominia, recently completed the main link of the newest trans-Atlantic cable, which will transmit eight messages at once between the United States, Europe and Africa. The ship is 500 feet long, 22 feet longer than its sister ship, which has laid more lines of cable than any other ship in the world. It has a crew of 130 men. Oil-burning engines drive it at a top speed of 14.5 knots an hour, and has 380,000 cubic feet of cable space allow it to carry approximately 3,000 miles of deep-sea cable. Four huge tanks in the hold contain these miles of sea cable, all in one piece. During a trip, an electric current is kept passing from the shore through the length of the cable, lighting a pregnant lamp. If the lamp goes out, indicating a break or the development of a defect in the wire, the man on watch presses a button which instantly stops all machinery and the ship itself. When the vessel is laying cable on the ocean's bed it goes on night and day at an average speed of seven knots an hour, leaving about two hundred miles of copper wire behind it during a twenty-four-

"HILL BILLIES" DIDN'T WHINE

The issue of the West Side Sun, "Down Town West Side" community paper, of last week carries a front page editorial stating that the "Hill Billies" were peeved over the Post Office.

We are at a loss to understand what the editor of the paper had in mind when he stated our was an unsportsmanlike attitude. The truth of the matter was that he did not understand the situation. The Hilltop Business Men's Association was not working to get the West Side branch of the Post Office transferred to the Hilltop. It was the desire of the association that such should remain to serve the people of that community and that a similar one be established here. Nothing but such plain facts were stated in the columns of the Record. There was no whining over the matter as is stated by the editor of the Sun.

Furthermore the "Hill Billies" stand corrected for calling the land west of the river the "bottoms." We presume that the Down Town West Side ends somewhere near Central avenue.

We hope that the residents and business men of the Down Town West Side may be informed that there is no spirit of rivalry between the two sections as far as the Hilltop is concerned and that the Hilltop Business Men's Association hopes to be able to co-operate in every respect with the West Side merchants.

A use has been found for the housefly, we read. The wings of the insect are being used for making an instrument with which the heat of the stars is measured. However since but one of the wings is enough for one instrument it is apparent that many new stars must be discovered before the number of flies will be appreciably reduced. In the meantime we can only suggest that preparations be made for a heavy swatting season or what method have you for ridding the household of them.

Perhaps we would all be a little better off if we were to take the Tom Sawyer attitude and turn duty into play. But then we must depend too much upon having others do our white-washing.

The Spectator

"An antagonism between the north and south is a sign of narrow-mindedness."

Two Things Pass

I am always well pleased to have an evening at home and have an anticipated visit be realized by the arrival of some congenial friends with whom I know an interesting conversation can be made to flow. Just by way of discourse I would say that it too often happens that people don't like the conversation of others.

However, when on such an evening at home as I mentioned above, Red Pullin and Professor Tittle, two outstanding members of the Club, paid me a visit I was satisfied to know that conversation should be about points in which we were all interested.

After lengthy greetings, as is the custom of such intimate friends, there was mention of two things which are characteristic of this new period in which we are living. Namely, they are the passing of the hatred between the South and the North and the passing of the class or caste in this country.

The Old and New South

"I had occasion to be rebuffed last week," I was telling the two members of the Club, "for a mistake I made concerning the name of an institution, in which I made mention of the Confederates in a little unusual way. The matter was but of passing interest but I find that there are some who feel that there does yet exist some feeling between the north and the south."

"There is no reason for such," was the answer of Professor Tittle. "Those who are continuing to hold to such an antagonistic feeling are but showing their narrow-mindedness and have no reason for bringing up a matter that has been agreeably settled for half a century.

"Such an attitude is that of the old north and south. Such is a thing of the past and unity has been substituted. In the recent World War the men of both sections fought side by side and the hard feeling was rubbed out. They were fighting for a common cause. What had passed was to have no bearing on the future."

Red Pullin pointed out that the dividing line between the two sections has been wiped out and common interests link the two.

Another Change

Red Pullin, while reading the evening paper, commented upon the fact that a personage of royalty was to be married to a shop girl. "This would have been one of the impossibilities of the preceeding century," he said.

Jokingly Professor Tittle stated that perhaps the decreasing number in the circles of royalty were willing to select from the lower ranks in order to have a greater variety to choose from.

"But the same applies to classes everywhere," Red Pullin put in. "It is no longer the rich man that marries in the rich family. Instead there has been a decided change in favor of evening things up by giving the poorer classes a mating with the rich. Girls of today, while many are looking for a pot of gold to which they may attach themselves, are willing to sign a partnership with a man if he shows promise of doing things in the future."

Unexpected Millions

Last week a man in southern part of the state was informed that he had fallen heir to an estate of approximately 67 million dollars. At this time he is a small town merchant and has a large family. He has never known riches before.

It will be interesting to know what he will do with so much money. All the desired luxuries of the world could be his for a time. But it is doubtful if he will spend in large quantities because of the customary thrift which he has practiced through these many years.

We are all wondering if it would happen that such an heir would think of others to the extent that a portion of the money would be spent for mankind's betterment. Perhaps there would be a running thought to that effect at present while the money is not a reality, but it is doubtful if it would be remembered after the cash had really accumulated.

A Public Servant

The up-to-date funeral director is more than a mere merchant or seller of goods. He is a trained professional man, with a wide knowledge of the social, scientific and legal aspects of his work. What is more, he is a tactful, dependable advisor for the family into which death has come. All of these functions are performed in this establishment with the sympathetic care which the circumstances require.

The Double Deception

By MRS. E. O. CARLSTON

Author of "For Freedom"

He arrived in less than a half hour and [illegible] hotel. He left her toward a car which was standing in the parkway near the hotel. He [illegible] beyond.

"This is a surprise to me, Beatrice," said [illegible]. "When did you buy it?"

"Four weeks ago," he answered.

"And this is the first time you have [illegible] to be here. Come for friendship's sake before telling me. I had purchased a car," Bill said frankly.

"You found out, didn't you?"

"I certainly did," he said happily.

They were silent for a few minutes. Then Bea resumed conversation.

"I have often wondered why you would not accept that ring I gave you. I formed my opinion at the time which I then thought was correct. Could it [illegible]?"

"What was your opinion?"

"I thought you wanted a more expensive ring than I could then afford to give you."

Beatrice [illegible] the truth.

"You acknowledged that you cared [illegible]. But you [illegible] I don't believe you would have refused [illegible] determined to learn the truth [illegible]."

I was [illegible] out once for that," Beatrice said almost [illegible]. "Why did you [illegible] Warren Wood?"

It was now Bill's turn to be embarrassed. He finally said:

"Because just then when [illegible] disappointed me. I did not have a very good opinion of [illegible] belonging to [illegible]."

Beatrice did not blame him as she remembered times when she had [illegible].

"I have the ring with me that I offered you," Bill said earnestly. "Will [illegible]?"

Beatrice did not know how to answer him. She thought of Warren. "Which one of [illegible] the best?" she asked herself, but was unable to decide [illegible].

"Bea, will [illegible]? I will wear the ring on my right hand for a few months, if I fail to prove to you that I have changed my mind about the material value of things. If at the end of that time I can give you a favorable answer." She stopped and he supplied the remainder of the sentence.

"I may place it on the third finger of your left hand." That makes no difference. Bea [illegible] happiest [illegible] ever did," he said, [illegible] decided to keep the ring.

The last [illegible] Mr. Morgan, who had [illegible] affairs in [illegible] Beatrice and Bill [illegible] to make my connections. I shall [illegible] you often and hope to hear from you frequently."

A month from the day that they [illegible] Beatrice and her father had returned home and Helen continued the last part of her journey alone. Mrs. Wentworth had arrived [illegible] to the girls' disappointment. It would be harder to search for the [illegible] of it in the house.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"PIGMY"

This is a word that comes to us out of the page of Greek mythology, where we find the "pygmies," a nation of dwarfs, who lived near the sources of the Nile, or, as some authorities have placed them, in India.

The "Pygmies" took their name from the Greek word which means a cubit, the old measurement for about 13 inches, which described their height.

In Homer we learn of the cranes who used to migrate every winter to the Pygmies' country and whose appearance was always the signal of warfare to the little dwarfs, who had to arm themselves against their foe.

Later writers tell of an army of Pygmies who found the great Hercules in a deep sleep and prepared (in regular army formation, we presume) to attack him. The giant, however, awakened, laughed, wrapped them all up in his lion's skin and carried them away!

Since artificial ice has become so extensively used, people have discussed the question of purity of ice. In answer to the argument that the ice taken from ponds and streams would contain many germs of disease, the Natural Ice Association of America has made public its investigations. William Sedgwick, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, says that freezing is nature's own method of filtration and disposes of a great percentage of the harmful germs. Eugene Porter, of the New York Health Commission, enlarges upon Dr. Sedgwick's idea. He states that "40 or 50 per cent of the solid matter in streams and pools) goes down to the bottom by gravity." In freezing "you eliminate 90 per cent more, and then the cold storage takes out about 99½ per cent of the remaining bacteria. The water itself is so inimical to pathogenic bacteria that another 40 per cent die in the water." Thus there are less than five bacteria left in a cubic centimeter of ice. That is a very infinitesimal amount.

BILLIE AT THE ZOO

Billie Brownie was on his way to visit the Llama in the zoo when he was stopped by having a talk with the Gray Squirrel who had been busy eating peanuts for some time and who was ready to take a short rest and chat.

"Yes," the Gray Squirrel told Billie Brownie, "it is quite true what you have heard. Our family and the Red Squirrel family have always been quarrelsome and have not been on any too friendly terms. Of course we say it is the fault of the Red Squirrel and I suppose they say the same of us.

"But I'm quite sure that the fair opinion is that it is the fault of the "First of All, I Come From South America."

Red Squirrels that we do not get along together. Yes, I'm sure of that.

"They're so quick-tempered—or they can fight, at any rate. We're not as that at all, no, indeed."

"I believe you," said Billie Brownie. "Another time I want to have more of a talk with you, but today I have an engagement with a llama and I don't think one should keep a llama waiting. I have a feeling one shouldn't do that."

"Well, stop for a chat again, Billie Brownie," said Gray Squirrel, as he gave his tail a fine flourish in saying good-by to Billie Brownie.

"Well, am I on time?" asked Billie Brownie as he came to where the llama was.

"I'm sure I don't know," said the Llama. "I haven't any wrist watch and I haven't any clock, and if I had I couldn't tell the time. Of course I [illegible] to meal time. But I

Norma re-entered the room, followed by Warren. Mr. Wendall said innocently and very soberly to Norma, at the same time giving the children a warning look to keep quiet:

"Stand still, girlie, just a minute. Don't move now."

Not suspecting a trick, Norma did as she was told, wondering what had struck Mr. Wendall, who now, unnoticed by her, made a suggestive gesture with his hand for the benefit of Warren, who now for the first time, saw what Mr. Wendall was up to. He placed both hands on Norma's shoulders and nodded toward the small sprig overhead. She jerked away from him, laughing, and gave him quite a chase through the downstairs rooms of the house. He finally caught her, and led her back to the starting place.

The little scene that followed caused the children to break into hilarious laughter, and Mr. and Mrs. Wendall were little less amused. Norma and Warren did not see the extremely funny side of it, as they had just made

"waiting," said Billie Brownie. "I am thankful that I haven't."

"No," said the Llama, "I haven't been kept waiting. Of course I am here and ready to see you."

"I am glad to hear that," chuckled Billie Brownie. "And you promised me to tell me something of yourself, if you remember, and if it is not too much bother."

"I remember and it is not too much bother," said the Llama.

"First of all, I come from South America, and I am a little bit like a camel except that I am much smaller and I haven't any hump, nor have I humps!

"I have a relative known as the Guanaco.

"Then I have an Alpaca cousin. His family name has become famous for there is a cloth known as alpaca cloth, and that has come from the fleece of his family.

"The Alpaca family aren't so strong as we are away from their home mountains and they object to other climates which don't bother us at all.

"Of course you know we have always been useful in carrying bundles and packages and have been regular 'beasts of burden,' as the saying is.

"We have lovely long wavy hair as you can see, but there is an Alpaca cousin here, a white one, with blue eyes. That's quite an interesting thing for, somehow, when thinking of blue eyes people would think of a little girl and not of an Alpaca.

"But you said you had another engagement to keep. I don't want to

"Yes," said Billie Brownie, "I promised [illegible] has been on my mind all week long, day and night. As we really, speaking in terms of days and months, have known each other only a short time, I at first intended not to mention the subject to you until spring; but I was so anxious to know if you cared that I resolved to ask you tonight."

"Making one old year resolution, as it is not yet midnight, and one for the new year, too," Norma added.

"You haven't answered my question yet. Do you love me, honey?"

She did not reply verbally, but the look in her eyes convinced him that he had nothing to fear. He took her in his arms and she made no effort to resist his caresses. The only drawback to Warren's felicity was the memory of his flirtation with Beatrice Morgan. He had, of course, never been sincere in what he said to her, but the words had been spoken, and Beatrice did not know that he was merely flirting with her. He tried to put the trifling occurrence from his mind, and went to the foot of the stairs to call Mrs. Wendall, who came down immediately.

TWO INJURED IN GAS EXPLOSION

Jack Hunt, 520 S. Wheatland avenue and Maurice Horwitz, 478 S. Eighteenth street, suffered face and body burns Thursday, when gas exploded at the Horwitz home. They were removed to White Cross hospital where they are not regarded as being seriously burned.

A gas leak on the second floor caused an accumulation which ignited when one of the men struck a match.

Horwitz had recently purchased the home and with Hunt, an employe of the Ohio Decorating Co. of N. High street were decorating inside.

Several windows on the second floor were blown out.

THE HAPPY CAT

"Me-ow, Me-owu," said Aggie, the cat. "I have been asked to tell about myself and my nice home.

"My mistress is a lovely lady. She is very wise and very clever. She has wonderful books and magazines and papers about, and to show that I am the cat belonging to a clever person I pick out the best of these books and magazines and papers and sit upon them!

"I Pick Out the Best and Sit Upon Them."

"How do I know which are the best ones? They're all good and so they're all best to my cat mind, me-ow-me-ow; ha, ha, you don't think I was going to say that.

"Joyce is the name of my mistress.

"She has a little box outside her window and in the box she grows grass for me as I really love grass. Then she grows radishes for the rest of the family, for they love radishes.

"Then there are two paroquets and they like to nibble at all sorts of things. They like to nibble at the paper covers on books.

"I suppose they think they show their wisdom that way but I think to sit on wisdom is better than to chew it!

"They are watched by a cat from the roof of the house beyond but they are quite safe and though the cat gazes at them with his big green eyes they don't notice the cat.

"I've heard my mistress say that.

"And these paroquets are allowed all about. They even climb on the window sill when the window is open and they never go away. They seem to think that the world ends where they are and that there is nothing to see beyond.

"But I must continue to tell about myself.

"I am very neat. I keep my black fur looking glossy and smooth.

"I exercise enough but not too much. I play and I sleep and I eat. My white tuft of hair under my neck, or upon the front of my neck, is a handsome touch, my friends say.

"I have a pink ribbon to match her pink dress, a red ribbon to match her red dress, a blue ribbon to match her blue suit and a greenish yellow ribbon to match my eyes.

"After every meal I chew at the broom-handle and so keep my teeth clean.

"My mistress says the broom-handle has many marks from my teeth and that I never finish a meal without doing this, and that is the truth.

"I keep my claws sharp by scratching them upon the wicker chairs.

"And I jump beautifully.

"I get up high, on a very tall mantelpiece, and then I put my two paws on the next little outstanding part of the mantelpiece and then I jump for the sofa below.

"My mistress says it is a most beautiful jump.

"Then sometimes I sit a long time on the mantelpiece while people wait to see this beautiful jump. And I keep them waiting for it so it will seem like an important act.

"My mother and my father were fine, well-mannered cats and my mistress says I take after them. I play with my mistress and she plays make-believe tunes upon my paws while I purr and she sings.

"But she says you have to know me to really know how wonderful I am. That is what my mistress Joyce says. And so it must be the truth!"

Is the Time to Buy Next Winter's COAL!

The wage battle between coal miners and operators will be long-drawn, unsettled conditions at the present time indicate. A long wage fight means a shortage of coal and consequently soaring prices. No one can foretell what the coal situation will be next fall, nor what prices will be necessary.

The Double Deception

By MRS. E. C. CARLSTON
Author of "For Freedom."

"Auntie," which was the term he always used when addressing Mrs. Wendall, although she was really a cousin to him by marriage. "I want you to meet my intended wife."

Mrs. Wendall laughed

"I'm not surprised," she said. "I have been expecting it. Both of you showed the symptoms."

CHAPTER XII

It was a cold January night. At the railroad station in Boston a young man, carrying a small valise, walked impatiently back and forth across the floor of the waiting room, waiting for the hands of the clock to indicate that it was ten-thirty.

"I'm sorry to have to take this confounded trip home, when I wanted to spend every evening with Norma. Well, all I can do is to hurry back as quickly as possible. Wonder what dad will say when I tell him I am going to become a benedict. He don't think much of married life, but I never could learn why," was the substance of his thoughts as he waited for the train.

Two days later found him ascending the steps leading onto the front porch of his father's home. Mr. Allison who was watching for him, opened the front door to admit him.

"Called you home to talk over business maters. You know we have to start the New Year right," he said.

"Dad," Warren announced, "I've got a little piece of news for you, and I'll have to tell you and get it out of my system before going into the details of our business."

"What's happened?"

"I am going to get married," Warren announced joyfully.

Mr. Allison's face fell, but he instantly forced a smile, and grasped his son's hand.

"I wish you happiness, and hope you have chosen wisely."

"Believe me, I have," Warren said enthusiastically. "She's the prettiest little thing, brown hair, lovely eyes—"

"Never mind the description. What is her name?"

Norma Wentworth."

Mr. Alison tottered, and would have fallen to the floor if Warren had not caught him quickly.

"Now, father, please tell me what has upset you so," Warren insisted.

"My boy, I have a story to tell you, and am sorry I have waited this long."

"Almost twenty-five years ago, I met your mother, who had been previously married to another man. They were divorced, and I did not know that she still cared for him. Time passed by. You were born. Two more years rolled along, and a baby girl was born. Before this child was four months old, I discovered that my wife had married me to spite her first husband, who had also remarried. We quarrelled. I had to go away on a business trip, and when I returned, she had gone taking the baby with her. I put a detective on her track, and when he reported that she was using the name of Wentworth, I paid him and dismissed him, as I did not want her back when I learned that she had dropped my name."

By this time, Warren guessed what his father was aiming at. He buried his face in his hands, unable to stand the terrible blow.

Mr. Allison went on:

"Your mother's name was Norma. The baby was named after her."

"Probably the likeness of the name is merely a coincident," Warren said, hopefully, changing his position to a more erect posture.

"Has she ever mentioned the name of 'Morgan' to you?" Mr. Allison questioned.

"She spent her childhood and early girlhood with a family of Morgans in Illinois," Warren said, becoming discouraged again.

Business Is Good Say Business Men

Members of Association State That Holiday Sales Will Reach New Mark.

Business is good according to Hilltop merchants and they state that this Christmas season has been one of the busiest they have experienced in many years.

Further proof of the heavy shopping in the past two weeks is shown in the number of tickets members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association have given out with their purchases. The number has exceeded that of any other similar contest held in the merchants, during the school days have been giving them out.

This method will continue to serve as a barometer for merchants of the Hilltop Business Men's Association until February 1 at which time a public celebration will be held in the main business section of the Hilltop.

The car to be given away by the merchants is on display at Vinn Brothers, Hilltop Ford Dealers.

Scout Troop May Purchase Cabin

Move Is Started to Secure Lot and House for Troop 43.

A movement was started last week to secure a cabin and grounds for Troop 43, Boy Scouts meeting at Highland Avenue school. A. W. Elliot is scoutmaster.

A committee headed by G. T. Cooper and composed of Frank Allen, James Metheny and J. A. Miles are considering plans for purchasing the cabin. Every member would pay similar amounts to which they make over night hikes and week end trips.

The committee is considering a site known as Stump Burrough on the Count House road near Westerville. The house has a large front room, a dining room, kitchen, bathroom and two bed rooms with built-in beds. The attic can also be finished for sleeping quarters.

A large garage is on the rear of the place. There are 25 oak and maple trees and 15 fruit trees, with much shrubbery. A filtered cistern is on the grounds. The house is wired for electricity.

A committee meeting will be held Friday night at which time further plans will be made. Another site west of the Hilltop is under consideration.

James Hackett, aged 64, of 2413 West Broad St. died in the Bell Light hospital early Tuesday morning after he had been struck by a street car Monday evening at West Broad street and Oakley Avenue. He suffered a fractured skull.

He was crossing the street when the accident occurred. Motorman of the car was H. H. Rowley, 655 Nashoba Ave., and conductor was Ben VanAtta, 104 Hawkes Ave.

Ice Company Bill Tabled for Week

Throws Favorable Light on Proposed Spot Zoning at Hague and Brand.

On the motion of Councilman Simmons, who last week voted in favor of granting permission to the City Ice and Fuel Co. to erect an ice manufacturing plant at 2778 West Broad St., the bill was tabled Monday night until next meeting of Council.

This throws a favorable light on the situation and the action of the committee when the final vote is taken may be against the establishment of the plant despite the fact that they voted four to three for it in committee meeting last week.

Merchants and residence owners in the vicinity continue to object to the change and use they cite it as spot zoning. A favor of the ice plant and any such repeated actions may be taken if the first step is taken now.

Members of the Hilltop Business Men's Association urge those interested to be present at council meeting Monday night.

The Roman, Greek and Armenian-Greek bodies have each their respective section of the church, but their Christmas celebrations do not coincide all the same day. The Latin Christmas is celebrated in the Roman Catholic altar on December 25. Thirteen days later the Orthodox Eastern persons the Greek rite. Another 12 days later the Armenian church keeps its own celebration of the Byzantine rite.
